THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

A Comprehensive Review of General Meade's Late Campaign.

The Manner and the Causes of Its Failure.

The Object, the Plan, the Advance, and the Retreat.

ARMY OF THE POTOMAC,
KELLY'S FORD, VA., Saturday, Dec. 5, 1863.

Correspondence of the New-York Times.

It is essential to the best interests of the country that the public should at once be made thoroughly acquainted with all the facts connected with the late movements of this army—the many obstacles which presented themselves to the Commanding-General, and the frequent disappointments to which he was subjected from the commencement of the march to the final withdrawal of his forces to this side of the Rapidan. To faithfully place these facts before the public, in order that it may approve or disapprove with an intelligent judgment, is the object of this communication.

THE ENEMY'S FORCE AND POSITION.

The force of the enemy consisted of EWELL'S and HILL'S corps and PICKETT'S division, of LONGSTREET'S corps, which was not sent South—not less, in the aggregate, than 80,000 men, while our own, in numbers, was probably somewhat its superior. At the time the Commanding-General ordered the advance, the position of the enemy was as follows: EWELL'S corps had been withdrawn from the lower fords of the Rapidan, and posted behind intrenchments, and on natural vantage ground, his left resting on or near the river, while his right extended toward Orange Court-house, causing his line, as may be seen on the map, to run nearly north and south, and to front toward the east—thus leaving Ely's, Culpepper, Germanna, Jacobs' Mills, and other fords uncovered. HILL'S corps was in the vicinity and south of Orange Court-house, separated from EWELL'S by several miles.

GEN. MEADE'S PLAN.

The object of Gen. MEADE was to cross at the lower fords, and to push his columns rapidly to the south and west, to the vicinity of, and, if possible, beyond Old-Verdierville, in the direction of Orange Court-house, thus gaining the interval between EWELL'S and HILL'S corps, and enabling him to give them battle in detail. It was known by Gen. MEADE that the left of EWELL'S line was well protected by earthworks and the character of the country, but that his right was less guarded, and that the plank-road from Old-Verdierville to Orange Court-house was not strongly covered by his forces.

PRELIMINARY FEATURES OF THE ADVANCE.

With this information, and the above object in view, Gen. MEADE ordered an advance at daylight on the 24th ult., but a severe rain-storm during the preceding night prevented the movement. The notice of the advance in the Washington papers of that date, although premature, neither delayed the movement, nor caused the enemy to change his position, as has been alleged. The enemy probably did not learn of the intended movement until it had commenced, on the 26th of November. On the 26th the roads were in passable condition, and the advance commenced at dawn. In the meantime Gen. MEADE had given orders to the different corps commanders to reconnoitre the respective roads they were to take, and to put them in such a condition that their troops might move with rapidity. This may have been faithfully accomplished by some of the corps commanders, but by others it was neglected, and, on account of this and other causes, serious delays were occasioned. It should also be stated that on the part of some of the subordinate Generals there was an inexcusable ignorance of the direction and termination of the roads over which they were to march, and a want of promptness in pushing forward their commands, which, as the sequel will show, proved fatal to the success of the campaign.

On the morning of the 26th, the Second, Third, Fifth and Sixth corps were between the Rappahannock and the Rapidan, while the First was on the north of the Rappahannock. The distance to Old Verdierville, from the position of the most remote corps, on the morning of the 26th, was not more than twenty-five miles, and from that of a majority of the corps it was less than twenty. Hence it was not unreasonable for Gen. MEADE to expect that each corps commander would be able to march his troops to the vicinity of this town inside of thirty-four hours, or, at the most, by the noon of the 27th.

THE ORDER OF MARCH.

The order of march was as follows, viz.: The Fifth corps was to cross the Rapidan at Culpepper Mine Ford and proceed to PARKER'S store, on the plank-road to Orange Court-house, and, if possible, to New-Verdierville, a town situated two or three miles, and perhaps still further, in a southerly direction from Old Verdierville. The First corps was to follow the Fifth, and take position in its rear, while the Second was to cross at Germanna Ford, proceed to Robertson's tavern, and, if possible, reach Old Verdierville, thus opening communications, by means of a cross road, passing near Mine Run, with the Fifth corps. The Third corps was to cross at Jacobs' Mill Ford, and push on to Robertson's tavern and take position on the right of the Second, while the Sixth was to follow the Third and take position in its rear, as the reserve of the right wing of the army, as the First was the reserve for the left wing. It might be stated here that one division of the First corps was left to guard the railroad on the north side of the Rappahannock.

THE FIRST DELAY.

The night of the 26th found all the corps across the Rapidan, save the First, which had had the longest distance to march, and which would also have crossed, as it was up in time, if the road upon the opposite side had been free. Friday morning, the 27th, only found the entire army on the south side of the Rapidan. A trifle more than half of the distance had been accomplished in twenty-four hours.

FAILURE OF THE THIRD CORPS TO ARRIVE.

Early Friday morning the army was in motion and its different columns were pushed forward with greater rapidity by more imperative orders. The Second corps, under command of Maj.-Gen. WARREN, reached Robertson's tavern about 1 o'clock in the afternoon of Friday, found the enemy, and commenced to ascertain his strength and position by a brisk skirmish fire. In the meantime, he was ordered not to attack till the Third corps, commanded by Gen. FRENCH, should come up. Three or four Aids were sent with dispatches to hurry up this corps, but it did not arrive, and when night came on it was still two or three miles from WARREN.

WHY THE THIRD CORPS DID NOT ARRIVE.

It is proper here to go back and follow the progress of this corps and examine the mishaps and misfortunes which attended its entire march. On the first day, Thursday, it was delayed two or three hours, owing to some difficulty in finding the best and most direct road, and also to the indifferent condition of the route which it passed over. On arriving at the ford it was found impracticable for the crossing of artillery, and hence it became necessary to send it around by Germanna Ford. Again under way, it had not advanced far before it had the misfortune of taking the wrong road, which passed too far to the right, and of meeting JOHNSON'S division of EWELL'S corps, which force held it in check, and again delayed its progress, while it enabled EWELL to rapidly concentrate the balance of his corps on the old turnpike road leading from Robertson's Tavern toward Mine Run, thus preventing the advance of WARREN. Scarcely was it out of this mishap before it again mistook the road, and night coming on found it two or three miles distant from the Second corps.

AN ATTEMPT TO REPAIR THE DELAY.

Gen. MEADE having waited hour after hour for the arrival of the Third corps, and having made use of his Aids, in vain, in endeavoring to hasten its march, at length sent a dispatch, about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, to Gen. NEWTON, in command of the First corps, which was at this time at PARKER'S store—distant some two or three miles from ROBERTSON'S tavern—ordering him to cross over to the support of the Second corps. This order Gen. NEWTON promptly obeyed, but it was dark by the time his corps arrived in the rear of WARREN, and the fight of the day was over. In the meantime the Sixth corps, under Gen. SEDGWICK, had arrived, and it was posted on the right of the Second. On the left, Gen. GREGG, with his cavalry, was gallantly holding in check the advance of HILL'S corps, which had been rapidly pushed forward from Orange Court-house, on the plank-road, passing PARKER'S store. Gen. SYKES, with the Fifth corps, during the afternoon of Friday, was supporting Gen. GREGG.

GEN MEADE'S PLANS ALREADY FRUSTRATED.

Such was the position of the different corps late on Friday night. If Gen. MEADE rested at all on this night he rested under the weight of many and bitter disappointments. All of his plans had been frustrated. The misfortune of the Third corps in taking the wrong road, and meeting JOHNSON'S division, developed the object of Gen. MEADE. The delays in its march, and its failure to support WARREN, enabled EWELL to concentrate, and prevented the advance of the Second corps, which would have separated the two corps of the enemy, and brought our line of battle beyond Mine Run, upon the same ground, and in the same impregnable position which the enemy held the following day. This delay also gave time for HILL to move up to EWELL'S support, and prevented GREGG, SYKES, and NEWTON from swinging around the left of our line, and cutting off all avenues of escape to EWELL'S corps.

A BATTLE STILL THE PURPOSE.

During Friday night Gen. MEADE determined to give the enemy battle in the morning. He had reason to believe that the battle would take place on the line directly in front of the Second corps. Hence, before daylight, the First corps was posted on the left of the Second, and an early attack was ordered. In the meantime the Fifth corps had been ordered over to support the Second, while the Sixth was on our extreme right. The light of the morning revealed the fact that the enemy had during the night abandoned his position in front of WARREN, and fallen back. An advance of our line was at once ordered. This line rapidly pressed forward, passed the enemy's line of earthworks, behind which he had fought the preceding day, and, at length, reached his second line of defence, which was two miles in rear of the first.

CHARACTER OF THE ENEMY'S CHOSEN POSITION.

This line was of the most formidable character. It extended along a prominent range or series of hills for a distance of six or eight miles. This series of hills formed all the angles of a complete fortification, and comprised the essential elements of a fortress. The centre of the line presented four or five well-defined facings of unequal length, occupying a space of more than 3,000 yards, with such angles of defence that the fire of the enemy was able to enfilade every avenue of approach, while his right and left flanks were not less strongly protected. Stretched immediately in the rear and on the flanks of his position was a dense forest of heavy timber. About 1,200 yards in front of his lines was Mine Run—a stream of no great width, but difficult for infantry to cross, from the marshy ground and dense undergrowth of stunted timber with which it was frequently flanked on either side, as well as from the abrupt character of its banks. In addition to these natural defences, the enemy had felled in front of a large extent of his position a thick growth of pine, as an abattis, while he had also thrown up earthworks of great strength along his entire line. Thus the position was much stronger than ours at Gettysburgh, and more formidable than the enemy's at Fredericksburgh.

AN EXTENDED RECONNOISSANCE.

When our lines had advanced on Saturday morning to within two thousand yards of the enemy's earthworks, a halt was ordered and his position was reconnoitered. A great part of this day passed away before the lines and strength of the enemy could be fully ascertained. It was the desire of Gen. MEADE to attack upon this day. The extent of our line of battle had been contracted for this purpose. The Third corps had arrived, and it had been posted on the left of our line, while the Sixth held the extreme right, and the First and Second the centre, supported by the Fifth. Upon the reports of his subordinate Generals and a thorough personal reconnoissance, Gen. MEADE was unwilling to make an assault upon this day, which now was nearly spent.

NO FIGHTING SUNDAY—PROPOSED ASSAULT ON MONDAY.

Thus Saturday passed. On the following day—Sunday—all was quiet. Both armies rested, and neither seemed disposed to break the repose of the day. Gen. WARREN, who had now been transferred from the centre to the extreme left, reconnoitered the right of the enemy's lines and reported personally, with the strongest assurances of success, that he could carry the works in his front. Upon this favorable report of Gen. WARREN, and also upon the encouraging reports received from the right of our line, the Commanding-General determined to make a vigorous assault at early dawn on Monday morning. To insure the success of WARREN on our left, he at once sent to him two divisions from the Third corps, and one from the Sixth, which, together with WARREN'S own corps, gave him a command of twenty-eight thousand men. The balance of the Sixth corps, together with the Fifth, held the right, while the two divisions of the First and one of the Third, held the centre of our line. The artillery was posted along the entire front of our line, and in a commanding position. The time for the assault on the right and left was fixed upon, and at 8 o'clock in the morning the struggle was to commence. At length something was determined upon—something definite—something encouraging after the bitter disappointments of the past three days.

A THIRD FAILURE, AND THE REASONS FOR IT.

Early Monday morning, the army was under arms, waiting impatiently for the signal gun. At last the sound of SEDGWICK'S cannon came rolling along the line, when the entire artillery of the right and centre opened upon the works of the enemy. But not a sound came from WARREN—not a gun was heard on the left. Is the army again to be disappointed?

Yes. Upon a more careful and thorough examination of the enemy's works, without consulting with Gen. MEADE—without consulting with a single officer—but assuming the entire responsibility, Gen. WARREN decided not to attack. He immediately reported to Gen. MEADE the reasons for his failure to attack, that he had misjudged the strength of the enemy's position, and that he was willing to sacrifice himself, rather than to sacrifice the army. Gen. MEADE at once ordered a postponement of the assault on the right and centre, and galloped to the left to ascertain if it was possible in any way for WARREN to be successful. He decided that success would be at an immense sacrifice of life, and that the defeat of WARREN would be disastrous to the army.

THE ARMY CONSEQUENTLY WITHDRAWN.

It was too late now to change the programme of the battle. It would consume another day to transfer the troops to the centre and to the right. The supplies of the army were nearly exhausted, and one day of rain would have caused the roads to be impassable. The army was safely withdrawn to this side of the Rapidan.

With these facts before the public, the purpose of this communication is accomplished. R.

Freedmen's Village, Virginia.

The Freedmen's Village, at Greene Heights, Arlington, Va., recently established by Col. GREENE, Chief Quartermaster of the Military Department of Washington, for the use of the colony of contrabands who are cultivating the Arlington estate for themselves, and not for its former owner, Gen. LEE, the leader of the rebel army, was dedicated with appropriate exercises Dec. 3. In connection with it, the school-house and chapel erected by friends for the American Tract Society, and the Home for the Aged and Infirm Freedmen, erected by contributors in Providence, R. I., and also to be under the care of the Tract Society, who will here make many comfortable and happy who have spent long years of unrequited toil, were also dedicated.

The exercises were held in the Society's chapel, which was crowded with visitors from Washington and Georgetown, among whom were Gens. HERRMAN, AUGUR and ARRESCHMIDT, Col. GREENE and many other distinguished men. A choir of thirty colored children from the Society's School at Camp Barker, sang several patriotic pieces, to the great delight of the audience. Mr. N. P. KEMP, of the American Tract Society, presided. Mr. NICHOLS, Government Superintendent of Contrabands, spoke of their condition since they had been under his care, and highly commended Col. GREENE for the successful management of the present undertaking. Rev. W. A. BEXBIZON, Superintendent of the Tract Society's work among the freedmen in the District, and Rev. Mr. ROCKWOOD, made statements of the labors of that Society among the freedmen in Washington and in the army and navy.

Very eloquent addresses were then delivered by Hon. L. E. CHITTENDEN, of the Treasury; Hon. Mr. BARNES, of this City; Major BEN PERLEY POORE, of the Boston Journal, and Hon. D. W. GOODE, member of Congress from Massachusetts. The occasion was one of deep interest, and a new interest was awakened in the philanthropic efforts for the elevation of this class, now occupying so much the attention of thoughtful men.

The American Tract Society was the first to enter the field in caring for the escaped slaves, who began to crowd into Washington early in 1862. They established a school for them in Duff Green's Row, when they were located there; and since they moved to Camp Barker, they have carried on a very successful school, in a building erected for this special purpose, by friends in Philadelphia and Boston. This school will be continued, and as well as that at Freedmen's Village, is conducted by a corps of competent teachers under the charge of Mr. H. E. SIMMONS, late of Providence. The results have been most satisfactory and the prospect is very encouraging.

HONOR TO THE BRAVE—AN ORDER FROM ADMIRAL DAHLGREN.

FLAG-STEAMER PHILADELPHIA,
OFF MORRIS ISLAND, S. C., Nov. 17, 1863.

GENERAL ORDER.—It is a gratifying duty to observe and make known the conduct of officers and men which obviously deserves such notice, particularly under fire.

The Lehigh grounded yesterday within good range of the enemy, and during the whole forenoon was under a very heavy fire of shot and shell from cannon and mortars. The Nahant, in assisting her to float, was also much exposed.

I can myself bear witness that nothing could have been better than the deportment of the commanders, officers and men of both vessels, under such trying circumstances.

Acting Ensign RICHARD BURR, who was severely wounded, is spoken of by his commanding officer in the official report, who also mentions an indispensable service that demands special notice.

Three times a line, to pass a hawser, was conveyed from the Nahant to the Lehigh—twice by Dr. LONGSHAW, the surgeon of the Lehigh, and once by three seamen of the Nahant—HONORE FERREE, WILLIAM WILLIAMS, and FRANK S. GILL. The latter I advanced in rate on the spot. The seamen of the Lehigh, Geo. W. LELAND, gunner's mate, and THOMAS IRVING, coxswain, who rowed Dr. LONGSHAW, will be also advanced a rate. And I shall also make honorable mention of them to the Honorable Secretary of the Navy, which is all I can do for Dr. LONGSHAW. It is not in my power to reward him suitably.

This order will be read on every quarter-deck of the fleet at the next general muster after its reception.

PANAMA, Saturday, Nov. 28, 1863.

Through the kindness of a gentleman, whose information is exact on the matter, I am enabled to give the TIMES the result arrived at by the Mixed Commission in Lima on American and Peruvian claims.

The Commissioners appointed under the Convention of Jan. 12, 1863, met, as required by the terms of the Convention, at Lima, Peru, on the 17th day of July last, and being organized, selected as umpire, Gen. PEDRO A. HERRAN, late Minister of New-Granada to the United States.

There was also presented to the Commissioners the claim of JOSE F. LAZARES vs. The United States, for upward of $600,000—being, in other words, the claims of A. G. BENSON against both Peru and the United States, for alleged losses growing out of the Lobos Island question, which was adjusted some years ago. This claim was laid before the Commission by the attorney of Mr. LAZARES, J. M. HUNEEDO, Esq., the late Commissioner from New-Granada. It was taken into consideration by the Commissioners, notwithstanding the arguments and protest of the agent of the United States; and on the departure of the steamer of Nov. 13 from Callao, it was generally understood in Lima that it had been rejected by the mixed Commission, whose final sittings were to terminate within a few days."

We have but little local news. Our Governor has returned from the interior, and in conjunction with the national Gen. IZLANEZ, is actively engaged in raising the quota of Panama for the war with Ecuador.

The small-pox is abating in Panama rapidly. The deaths, which have been several hundreds, have been almost wholly among the colored people. There is but little small-pox in Aspinwall.

Mrs. G. C. TIBB, of Fulton, Oswego County, N. Y., a passenger on the steamship Illinois, died at Aspinwall on the 20th, of erysipelas. She was on her way to Nevada Territory, where her husband resides. She was buried at the Laurel Cemetery, followed to the grave by a large number of cabin passengers. The funeral services were read by Mr. RIOS, United States Consul.

The steamship Ariel from New-York, with 800 to 900 passengers, arrived at Aspinwall on the 23d. They went forward from this port to San Francisco the next morning. The opposition vessel, the Illinois, arrived at Aspinwall on the 24th. Her 650 passengers are yet on board of her, and will probably get off from here by the Moses Taylor, about Tuesday, 1st December.

The principal item of New-York interest from Callao is the burning of the fine American clipper ship Ocean Pearl at her anchorage. It is not known how the fire took place. She had completed the discharge of her cargo the night before.

The American schooner St. Louis, of Boston, was lost on E. S. E. Shoal, Island of St. Andrews, near Aspinwall, on the 8th instant. She had no cargo. Captain and crew saved, and are on the hands of the U. S. Consul.

Mr. LA RAUSTRAN, U. S. Solicitor on U. S. claims against Peru, goes home on the Ariel to-day. Dr. MACKIE, U. S. Commissioner on same claims, will be here for next steamer. The other Commissioner, Mr. SQUIER, goes to Casco for four months, to pick up material for a book.

Mr. RIOS, U. S. Consul at Aspinwall, has been snapping up and putting in prison (claimed to be an arbitrary act by some) the gamblers who follow the passengers from New-York, and spread out "sweat-cloths" at Aspinwall, with which to rob passengers. He so manages that these fellows are not allowed bail, but have to "sweat it out" in the loathsome cells of a greaser prison for a night or two, which is awfully trying on their feelings, and will lessen the business materially. He forced one man to deliver up all he had won, in money watches, rings, &c., from the several fools who personated the machine.

BOLIVIA.

There is but little worthy of note from this State. Gen. SAENZ CENU, a man of despotic predilections, has been appointed Minister from Bolivia to Paris. The Comercio says: "The selection could not be less injudicious. The Ex-Protector will never abandon his reactionary tendencies. Besides, why do we need Legations to France, when NAPOLEON makes war upon one of the American nations?" &c. "The presence of the Ministers of American Republics in Paris is not only improper, but highly humiliating for them all."

The Bolivian Government has decided to coin good money at last, but of short weight.

CHILI.

Another session of Congress had been called, the fourth of the year, to act on ordinary matters left unfinished.

A Mr. BRASSEY, contractor for building railways in India and Spain, proposes to build "as many railways as the people of Chili have occasion for," if the Government will guarantee him 6 per cent. per year on the investment. He probably intends to build a few thousand miles of the article in Europe, and then saw them off in lengths to suit the market.

The expectations formed of the productiveness of the Santiago and Valparaiso Railroad, do not seem to be thus far verified. The gross income of the line is only about $1,600 per day, while the wages of employes alone amount to $150,000 a year.

Business is very dull in Valparaiso. Clearings of vessels for nitrate, &c., from coast ports to Europe, £3 15. Exchange on London, 43¾@44 pence per dollar. The excessive drought is still complained of in the Northern Provinces, and is injuring crops. Copper sells for $17 75 cash. Nitrate, $1 78¼. Lumber from Vancouver, sold at $26 on board, Flour $3 87@$3 25, six months. Barley $2 ⅌ fanega.

SOUTH AMERICA.

Burning of the American Clipper Ship Ocean Pearl—War Between Ecuador and the United States of Colombia—American Claims on Peru—General News—Markets, &c.

From Our Own Correspondent.

PANAMA, Saturday, Nov. 28, 1863.

The regular British mail steamship Bogota, from Valparaiso and intermediate ports, arrived at Panama on the 23d inst. She brings dates from Valparaiso and Santiago de Chili to the 2d, and from Lima and Callao to the 15th inst. The news from Chili, Peru, Bolivia and the Argentine Confederation is unimportant. But from Ecuador we have complete confirmation of the previous news, already published in the TIMES, that that State and the Republic of Colombia are determined upon the arbitration of war to solve the questions at issue between them. In my last I gave your readers a history of the events that have led to this sad result, and need not now repeat it. The Bogota brings $714,000 in specie for Southampton and a freight principally for England. Her freight list for New-York is very small—as the long monopoly of steam navigation by England of the South Pacific coast trade has turned that trade entirely from its natural channel, which is the United States, and carried it to Southampton and Liverpool.

ECUADOR.

Dates by private letters from Guayaquil are to the 15th November. Great indignation was felt throughout the Republic at the "insults heaped upon it and President GARCIA MORENO by Gen. MOSQUERA," Provisional President of the United States of Colombia. Congress, after authorizing President MORENO to declare war against us, closed its sittings on the 24th of October. The newspapers are full of acrimonious official correspondence on both sides, which is but a repetition of that already furnished you. There does not seem to be the least chance of avoiding a war. In fact, active operations may be said to have already commenced.

You already know that MOSQUERA had called an extraordinary session of Congress at Bogota for the 1st of January, to vote the means to carry on the war. He left Pasto, or Tuquerres, on the frontier of Ecuador, to be present at the sitting, in the latter part of October, but was followed by an express from the commander left behind, and who had less than 2,000 men with him, stating that the Ecuadorians were facing the Colombian force in such large numbers, that he could not be responsible for the result if a collision took place. Upon receiving this note, and on further learning that his forces had been annoyed by guerrillas in Pasto and Tuquerres, incited to action by President MORENO, MOSQUERA returned toward the frontier, sending before him a very violent and abusive note to the Government of Ecuador, complaining of these and other hostile acts. He also invited the Commander-in-Chief, Gen. FLOREZ, to an interview at Tulcan, to which the latter consented. But from some cause or other, the interview did not take place.

The United States, French and Spanish Ministers in Quito had responded to the circular of the Ecuadorian Minister of Foreign Relations, sympathizing with Ecuador in the quarrel, but expressing hopes that a peaceful solution of the questions at issue may yet be had.

Some of the principals of the old Ospina or Conservative party of New-Granada, (or Colombia,) overthrown by MOSQUERA, such as Señors MANUEL DEL RIO, JOSE F. ZARAMA and VICENTE CARDENAS, have made Guayaquil their headquarters, and are operating for a reactionary movement in Colombia, to be inaugurated in Pasto, and have made Col. MANUEL MARIA LOPEZ their chief. Of course they are against any settlement between the two Republics. The pretext is the despotic acts of MOSQUERA; but it is not believed that they will get any support from the more moderate of the Conservative party, as Dr. MANUEL MURILLO has already been elected to the Presidency in place of Gen. MOSQUERA, and will be inaugurated in April next. Of course the Jesuits and priests, who do not like MURILLO a bit better than they do MOSQUERA, will be found making all the trouble they can.

PERU.

The terms of settlement made by the Mixed Commission of Peru and the United States, for the settlement of claims, will be found under another head.

There is no news of importance from Peru, the Republic being in complete peace.

A treaty had been made between Peru and Bolivia, that, from the account given of it by the Lima Comercio, seems to be rather comprehensive in its character. Sentences decreed in civil matters in one country may be executed in the other. "The delivery to the authorities of all persons who have committed treason to the American cause, is conceded; thus, if ALMONTE and the other regents came to Peru or Bolivia, and a truly Mexican Government claimed them in order to have them tried, they would be given up; or if JUAREZ now DAVIS celebrated a treaty with Europe hostile to American interests, if he came in course of time to Peru or Bolivia, and he should be claimed by the legitimate Government of the United States for trial, he would be given up."

The exports from Peru the present year amount to $23,120,234.

In the month of October 23,669 tons register of guano was exported from the Chincha Islands to Europe. None to the United States.

The small-pox is abating in Lima and Callao.

GOV. SEYMOUR AND THE QUOTA.—The following is the letter the Governor has addressed to the Supervisors of the different towns:

STATE OF NEW-YORK, EXECUTIVE DEPARTMENT,
ALBANY, Dec. 7.

To the Supervisor of the Town of ——

SIR: Impressed with the importance of prompt effort on the part of the State to procure its quota of troops, under the call of the President for three hundred thousand men by voluntary enlistments, and thus avoid the impending draft, I earnestly and respectfully request you, in connection with such influential citizens of your town as you may associate with for that purpose, to enter immediately upon the duty of raising by voluntary enlistments the quota of your town. The recently obtained action of the War Department on this subject—a copy of which is appended—will greatly facilitate your labors, and, it is believed, do much to secure a result so desirable. You will learn the quota of your town from the Provost-Marshal of your district.

HORATIO SEYMOUR.

SAN DOMINGO, MEXICO AND CUBA.

Movements of the French in Mexico.

OPERATIONS OF THE GUERRILLAS.

THE INSURRECTION IN SAN DOMINGO.

From Our Own Correspondent.

HAVANA, Saturday, Dec. 5, 1863.

At San Luis Potosi no little excitement had been lately occasioned by the appearance of two Americans, who, says a paper in the French interest, were announced by VIDAURRI to be Commissioners from the Government of the United States to arrange with the Juarez Government the manner of aiding in the defence of the legal order of things. These grand hopes, continues the above-named journal, were, however, doomed to be illusory, it being discovered that the so-called Commissioners had no other business but to arrange the passage of a Railroad through Chihuahua, and the other to sell some arms.

COMONFORT went lately to San Luis by the Queretaro stage coach, and returned immediately to the last named place by the same conveyance. The object of his journey was not known.

GONZALES ORTEGA, according to the same authority, is not on good terms with the people of San Luis. He would not receive the Chief Commissioner of Taxes appointed by them, nor raise the troops that they had asked for, nor send assistance of any kind. It was thought that Zacatecas would be declared under martial law.

On the 7th of last month, one of the daughters of DOBLADO was married to Don RAMONO RUIZNOS GAZLARDO, in honor of which a grand ball took place on the night of the ceremony.

DOBLADO was to set out a few days after with all his family, including the newly married couple, for San Miguel, and would return to arrange his abandonment with the Government of the State as soon as the French appointed its Capital. His family would continue their journey to San Luis or Monterey.

DOBLADO is reported to have said publicly that it is not possible to do anything to prevent the occupation of the State and that of all the country, although there were still visionaries who maintain the contrary.

The above, with the latter part of the paragraph italicized, is an extract from a letter of the correspondent of the Estafette, a Franco-Mexican paper, and therefore too much reliance must not be placed upon it.

The troops of the State (Guanajuato) who had advanced beyond Queretaro, had fallen back, says the same paper, the Estafette, to Celaya, and it was generally believed that they would fall back still further.

JUAREZ' party entertained great expectations from the expedition of PONFRESO DIAZ. They supposed him to be by this time at Tehuacan with 6,000 men, (for they expect that in this last-named place he would be strengthened by 4,000 men who were to come from Oajaca,) threatening Puebla, Orizaba and Jalapa, and even cherished the illusion that he would be able to approach Mexico City. The Estafette, from which the above is copied, says, the heroic defence of Tasco ought to have shown them what is the spirit of the people, and how little there is to be hoped for from the hordes which that officer commands.

The same paper adds:

"The estates of GUAZAMES and CROSSE were sequestrated and their proprietors were obliged to disburse a very large sum, (according to some, $75,000 and according to others $60,000,) to have the measure revoked. The sequestration of the estate of GOMEZRON was likewise taken off for $12,000 or $14,000."

BARRIGARAR issued a proclamation, dated Oct. 31, promising to respect the opinions, persons and interests of all the inhabitants of the State of Michoacan, with the exception of the traitors, with whom he would have no dealings; that he would have recourse to no forced requisition, nor lay hands upon any other resources than those obtained by contributions fairly divided and collected with economy, and that when necessity compelled him he would appeal to the well-known patriotism of the inhabitants of Michoacan to aid him voluntarily.

In addition to the above a circular had been issued, a few days previously, by the Governor of the same State to the inhabitants of Influence, ordering each one separately to be ready, when due notice was sent, to march to any place indicated with his friends and dependants, or any others whom he could influence to accompany him to resist the invaders of the soil.

The work on the railroad from Vera Cruz to Mexico was being actively prosecuted under the temporary direction of Señor ALTAMIRAN, as Mr. LYONS was not yet completely recovered from the severe wounds that he had received from the hands of the guerrillas. The works of the railroad had reached a place called Sordo, about a league beyond Soledad.

Col. DUPIN arrived at Orizaba on the 5th of November, and it was said that he had been placed in command of all the counter-guerrillas, or those on the side of the intervention, in the State of Vera Cruz.

According to the Estafette, the stage from Puebla, expected in Mexico City on Monday, did not arrive, and, unfortunately, the fears excited by the delay proved to be well founded. By some travelers who arrived at Mexico on Tuesday night at a very late hour it was known that on the evening before a band had stopped the stage, and carried away the passengers to the mountains. A detachment of Zouaves sent out in pursuit of them came up with the robbers a short distance from the road to Mexico City. The bandits were attacked with spirit, and had twelve killed and sixteen wounded, and a few taken prisoners. Two of the Zouaves, it was reported, were seriously wounded.

The Boletin Oficial of Puebla gives the following:

"Yesterday morning at 7 o'clock JOSE MARIA AREZA, a carpenter by trade, who kept a drinking place in Merced-street No. 8, was executed in the square of San José. The above, together with another man whose name is not known, attacked on Saturday evening, the 31st ult., DON ANTONIO GOMEZ, as he was leaving the city by the garita of Amatlan for Señor PIERA'S manufactory, whither he was carrying $500 to pay the workmen. About 3 o'clock in the afternoon of that day Señor GOMEZ, who was riding quietly along, observed two men also on horseback behind him. After some time, the tenacity with which the two men followed him excited his apprehensions, and to secure himself whether any evil design was intended, he turned off from the road he was following into another. The two men immediately rushed upon him and forcing him to dismount, robbed him of the money, with which they escaped. Fortunately, a few minutes after three individuals came up, who succeeded in apprehending AREZA, but the other get away, leaving his horse and the pistol of which he had robbed Señor GOMEZ."

The accused being tried by a Court-martial of robbery, with violence, was sentenced to be shot, which took place as mentioned above.

The last news received from Santo Domingo mention that 300 of the insurgents had presented themselves to Gens. SANTANA and GARDARA. ROJAS and two others of their leaders had been put in prison by the Haytian authorities, and were to be given up to the Spaniards. Two other leaders are said to have given information to Gen. VARONA. The Spaniards boast that the insurrection is nearly put down in every part, except in the district called the Cibao, which is designated as the part from whence the rebellion at first emanated. The Spanish Government appears determined to crush it down, according to the Russian plan with Poland, by numerical force, for late advices, received here from the Peninsula, state that three of the mail steamers left Cadiz with troops last month, within a few days of each other—the mail steamer Ciudad Cardal, on Nov. 14, the Porto Rico on the 18th and the Ports on the 19th.

During the month of November there have been dispatched to this island 6,000 troops, taken from the different corps in Spain, and before the 15th ult. 3,000 had already left. With the 6,000 which are now on the way, the reinforcements sent to the Spanish West Indies amount to 15,000. The vessels belonging to the navy are incessantly employed in transporting to Cadiz the contingents from the different corps to be sent here and to St. Domingo.

The charitable society called the Association de Beneficencia Domiciliaria, of this city, consisting entirely of ladies, have been holding a charitable bazaar to raise funds. The attempt has been entirely successful—the respectable sum of $1,800 66 having been collected from the sale of tickets of a species of lottery, in which those who obtained prizes were entitled to the articles that had been used by various persons to be raffled for. Among them were many articles of great value, everybody, from the Captain-General down, figuring in the list of contributors. Some complaints had been made about the fairness, which drew out strongly from the Committee, who deny that there were any just grounds for them. The bazaar was held in the saloons of the well-known ROSSETTI'S café, where the public balls and masquerades take place, and from there being no opera this season, for the TACON Theatre is closed, the Havana public went to the bazaar as much for amusement as for charity, considering that the stalls were occupied by the young ladies of the beau ton of Havana.

THE "CHANUKA" BALL.

Grand Masquerade at Irving Hall by the Hebrew Residents of New-York.

A successful masquerade is an incident in the records of a metropolis, upon which chroniclers may well dilate with pride and satisfaction. The difficulties naturally attending an entertainment of this character have probably deterred the usually enterprising Gothamites from naturalizing the bal masque here, as has been the case with pleasure-loving Paris. They say New-York resembles Paris, yet where, among the many particulars in which a metropolis should excel provincial cities, and in which we claim especial credit for our rising town, do we observe this delightful institution?

There is a portion of our community that does not always receive due credit for the good that it accomplishes. The Jewish population, though confessedly less numerous than the members of other denominations, is by no means inconsiderable in New-York. It is not to their monuments of judicious charity, any more than to their excellent position in the commercial world, that we propose referring. It is of another phase in their local history that we shall now speak, and a pleasant phase too. Probably no class in our community are more choice and generous in their social enjoyments. A most delightful illustration of this position was afforded by the "Chanuka" Fancy Dress Ball and Masquerade, given at Irving Hall, on Tuesday evening, under the auspices of the Orpheus Club, to which yesterday we had space only to make brief reference.

The Jewish festivals are not all of the same character as regards solemnity. The peculiar ceremonials attendant on most of these festivals, partake mainly of a religious nature. There are several exceptions, however. "Purim," or the Feast of Esther, celebrated in the month of March, is one of these. It is a season annually given over to jollity and humor, mirth and gladness. For the past two years it has been well commemorated in this City by grand masquerades, the last given at the Academy of Music during March, 1863, being the most brilliant social gathering witnessed here for many years.

Emboldened by the absolute success of these entertainments, they determined that the festival of Chanuka should receive the like attention. This festival is celebrated in memorial of the deliverance of Israel from Antiochus Epiphanes, King of Syria, about two thousand years ago, when, in consequence of the valorous deeds of the Asmonean family, Judas, son of Mattathias the Maccabee, and his valliant brothers, the barbarian hosts that had exercised an oppressive dominion over the Jewish people, were driven from their soil and the Hebrew commonwealth restored. As a memorial of the miraculous preservation of the holy oil in the sanctuary, whereby there sufficed for lighting the holy lamps eight days, it is customary for each Jewish household to have an article called a "Chanuka" lamp, fashioned for eight branches, one for each day of the festival. In the synagogues there is also a candlestick, like that used in the ancient temple, wherein tapers are lighted—one the first night, two the second, and so on.

So much for the occasion.

The "Chanuka Ball" was given under the auspices of the "Orpheus Club," an Association of Jewish young men who evidently understand how to invest an affair of this character with the elements of success. It is surprising how they manage to exclude all that savors of impropriety. The company was as exceptionable, thus triumphantly answering one serious objection urged against masquerades. The spirit of sociability was diffused, contributing most essentially to the enjoyment of the guests. It was, in truth, a gathering of prominent Hebrew families, and the concomitants were as might have been foreseen, the same precautions exercised as in a similar affair at a private residence.

Admission was only by card of "Invitation," bearing the name of the guest and the member of the Committee by whom issued. Accompanying the tastefully engraved card was an invitation in manner following:

NEW-YORK, Nov. 17, 1863.

DEAR SIR: The Orpheus Club request the pleasure of your company at their first Invitation Fancy Dress Masquerade Ball, to be held on Chanukah, night Tuesday, Dec. 1, at Irving Hall. Inclosed is a ticket of admission for yourself and ladies. Yours respectfully,

LIONEL DAVIES, President.
ARNOLD TANZER, Vice-President.
JACOB S. ISAACS, Treasurer.
BERNARD LEMANN,
MANUEL A. KURSHEEDT,
LOUIS M. PHILLIPS,
SOLOMON MOSES, } Directors.
GEORGE LEVY, Secretary.

Upon the dy leaf of the invitation were printed the REGULATIONS.

1. Admittance to the ball will be restricted to those having cards of invitation, bearing their name and that of the member of the Club by whom introduced.
2. Cards of invitation are not transferable under any circumstances.
3. All persons must unmask to a member of the Committee on entering.
4. Persons representing drunken, offensive, or other improper characters, will not be admitted.
5. Until 12 o'clock, no person will be allowed on the floor unless in costume. Dominoes and military uniforms are considered in costume.
6. At 12 o'clock all masks must be removed.
7. There will be no intermission for supper.
8. Dancing will commence at 9 o'clock, precisely.

As they entered the hall, the guests unmasked to the member of the Reception Committee in attendance, and proceeded from the dressing rooms, until the ball opened. About half-past nine, the fine military band of the Seventh regiment, conducted by Mr. GRAFULLA, struck up the beautiful strains of "Diporah;" after which the doors were thrown upon, and the guests entered, and made the circuit of the grand saloon, the orchestra playing a march arranged upon Hebrew melodies. Dancing was at once fairly commenced and continued without intermission until four o'clock, Wednesday morning.

And now, for a moment, to refer to the DECORATIONS.

These were in exquisite taste. The windows on either side of the Hall were hung with bright tricolor drapery, patriotic emblems being displayed at intervals. The hall was brilliantly lighted up; from the brackets were suspended handsome baskets of flowers, artistically arranged. The galleries were adorned with festoons of red, white and blue bunting, looped up with shields and stars of feather-flowers. The stage, upon which the orchestra were stationed, was made to assume the form of a garden, blooming with flowers, and fragrant with evergreens; at the back, three fountains apparently throwing up jets of spray.

THE MUSIC

was of a beautiful character, the vivacious predominating; quadrilles, lancers, polkas, galops and redowas followed one another in varied succession, relieved by promenades, during which the military band (placed in the gallery opposite the stage) discoursed sweet selections from the latest operas, and ballads and martial airs of a stirring character. The overture from "William Tell" was brilliantly given. Indeed, the music was capital throughout, and the steps of the willing dancers were even quickened by the lively melodies to which the figures were set.

THE FLOOR

was under the charge of an energetic Committee, consisting of Messrs. LIONEL DAVIES, Chairman; Arnold Tanzer, M. S. Isaacs, Joseph A. Levy and M. A. Kursheedt. The arrangements were admirable, the regulations being courteously, but firmly carried out. The Reception Committee on duty embraced Messrs. JACOB S. ISAACS, Chairman; Louis M. Phillips and Joseph S. Hart. They likewise were strict in the enforcement of the rules regarding admission, and the result was, as we have said, a company thoroughly unexceptionable.

just prior to midnight, was brilliant in the extreme. Costumes of every conceivable variety delighted and even bewildered the eye; it seemed as if we had been transported to a fairy palace, where the spirits of the heroes of the past were engaged in one grand spectacular jollification, and had summoned to enliven the scene the beauty and grace which fairyland alone can command at pleasure. Sultanas and beggars, princesses and apple-women, Spanish beauties and Venetian Greek girls and Irishmen, Italian bandits and Mexican cavaliers, peasants of every nationality, the marchioness of the French Court and the Don Cæsar de Bazan, of many courts, the stock broker and the inevitable Paul Pry, the Goddess of Liberty and the contraband; Mrs. Sheddy, in full feather, with magnificent stock of brilliants, and the dashing Helen McGregor, in all the ravishing beauty of a Highland lassie; the very King of the Devils in hideous yet brilliant attire, leading the personification of modesty, a gentle Arcadian shepherdess; French fisher girls and Spanish dancers, Cardinal Wolsey and Charles I; great, stupid boys, with their whistles and marbles, and vivacious school girls sounding their hoops; dominoes of every color and size, dominoes in black, and dominoes in white, in crimson and in yellow, in mauve and in sur, in gray and in green, hobgoblins of all degrees, fortune-tellers and fortune-hunters, the grave and the gay—all "lively," none "severe"—a veritable Noah's ark of curiosities in the shape of men and women, all determined to enjoy themselves and contribute to the general hilarity, and, as a matter of course, succeeding heroically in the attempt.

At midnight the long roll sounded, and the transformation took place. Then, mystifications were duly explained, errors corrected, general amusement created by the "developments," and those who had, in the galleries, been awaiting this moment very patiently, made their appearance upon the floor in evening dress, and thenceforward the masquerade ceased as a specialty, and the ball assumed all the features of a successful affair in some palatial private residence. Owing to the scrutiny exercised with regard to the distribution of tickets, nothing but the most pleasant spirit pervaded the assembly, all being pretty well mutually acquainted, and immoderations being dispensed by the Committee, so that the stiffness so detrimental to all pleasantness at these gatherings was unknown, and all went even as merrily as marriage bells are reputed to ring.

During the evening, choice refreshments were furnished, under the direction of Mr. HANSSOM, the gentlemanly proprietor of Irving Hall, the viands being prepared in strictly Jewish style.

In fine, taking the Ball in its entirety and in detail, it was a splendid success throughout, and we congratulate our Hebrew fellow-citizens on the high tone their social gatherings assume—on this "Masquerade" in especial. It might be as well to add that another Fancy Dress Ball, on a still grander scale, will be given at the Academy of Music in the latter part of March, in commemoration of the well-known festival of "Purim."

THE COSTUMES.

This account would not be complete were we to omit all special reference to the costumes. The following were among the most noticeable:

Miss R——M——r, as a Spanish dancer, plying her castanets in approved style, and very becomingly attired; as was also her sister, Miss E——M——r, in the character of the Dumb Girl of Portici. Miss L——A——n was another bewitching Spanish girl, her costume being especially becoming. Mrs. J——a was handsomely attired as a Marchioness. Miss F——z H——z made a pretty Russian peasant, with pink waist and black gown. Miss H——K——n was a charming Chinese lady of very high rank; while her sister, Miss A——K——n, as an applewoman, made a collection among the guests for a charitable object, and did excellently. Mrs. L. W. M——s was a capital Irishwoman, with her sweet little infant, a regular doll. Mrs. J——A——l, a Turkish Princess, in robe of white satin, richly embroidered. Miss R——E——l made a splendid Italian bandit's wife, in a handsome dress of black, with scarlet trimmings. Miss G——e R——l was neatly and becomingly dressed as Lady Gay Spanken, her sister, Miss M——n, being a charming peasant girl of French extraction. Miss M——e W——f was clad in the characteristic garb of Helen McGregor, Mrs. A——C——n, and Mrs. A——S——, were neatly made up as peasant girls. Miss E——z C——n wore one of the most becoming costumes in the room—that of a Spanish lady, with fan and jaunty little cap—all forming a bewitching picture. Miss C——n was a capital fortune seller; being generally acquainted, her revelations as to the future naturally created considerable merriment. Miss F——I——y and her sister, Mrs. A. H——g, wore elegant dominoes—the first of yellow satin, with black trimmings; the latter of pink satin. Mrs. H. L. S——r was a lively Tamborine Girl. Mr. M——e M——r wore the most elegant costume among the gentlemen, that of his Satanic Majesty, the king of the devils. Mr. J——C. L——l was a positive Protean. He made a comical Irishwoman, with super-abundance of cap; then was transformed into a Yankee, and finally a gallant Zouave. Mr. L——J. P——s was a first-rate Irishman, with a rich brogue and not ashamed to acknowledge it. Mr. H——K——a was a regular curbstone broker, with his book and pencil ready for a spec. He reported the gold market as rather dull. Mr. L——F——r wore a rich blue tunic and leggings of a dashing Mexican cavalier. Mr. L. W. M——e was a jolly little fellow in jacket and pants, pursuing his infantile gambols with apparent zest. Mr. I——C——n looked well as Don Cæsar de Bazan, Mr. L——L——n as his double.

THE MAYOR-ELECT, C. GODFREY GUNTHER.

Uneasy is the Head that Wears a Crown—Rural Retreats—A Peep.

It is quite probable that the Mayor elect realizes, at this present moment, the annoyances and responsibilities of his position. A mass meeting is held every day and evening before his residence, East Fourteenth-street, and smaller, but not less interested or persistent efforts to "make things square," in the way of outside gatherings, are visible in and about the offices and residences of all those of his friends who took a prominent interest for him against Tammany in the canvass. It is astounding how Mr. GUNTHER's majority has increased at a rate not according to count, since the night of Dec. 1, 1863. Men who were never before known to take to themselves the credit of departing from their customary glories of "always supporting the regular, or 'ring' nominations," now openly and hilariously boast that they belted upon, and worked and voted for the "honest and indefatigable Krim" from sunrise even unto sunset. They further declare, with a most attractive modesty, that he could not have been elected without their aid. The fact is, so bewilderingly unendurable is the pressure, that C. GODFREY GUNTHER, the irresponsible despoiler of Troy and Blunt's anticipated honors, has been compelled to declare himself "out of town" to avoid it. Although to a certain degree not unexpected, yet it has exceeded all expectations, and neither mentally or physically could man stand it. It is rumored, as an excuse for his disappearance, that he is perfectly worn out by the labors of the campaign and the preliminary duties attendant on his success. It is further rumored that he has deputed, in consequence, a committee of three from the McKeon General Committee, to listen to, prone into, and share in the decision on, such applications for place and pelf as have been and will be preferred by the most active and influential outside members of the Sinclair House organization. It is also rumored that the head man of this Committee, very properly, is Hon. JOHN MCKEON, the father of the new—or restorer of the old?—Democracy, and that he, too, has suddenly and imperatively found it necessary to seek his cozy cottage and hearth in Auburn, to try a long pending law-suit there, in which he was some time since retained as counsel, or at some future time will be.

The intimate friends of Mr. GUNTHER are innumerable at all times, but the adherents of the McKeon party are, at present, thicker than the leaves which fall from the trees in Autumn. To face such crowds, the individual components of which are all terribly diffident and magnanimously disinterested, would require more pluck than either Mr. GUNTHER or Mr. MCKEON can, it is said, summon to their aid, and more physique than they possess, until after a little rural rest and refreshment have been secured.

For the benefit of applicants for the offices to be dispensed by the Mayor, it may be said, (and the news comes from those who think they are behind the curtain,) that Mr. GUNTHER imagines the German Republicans helped him hugely in the late contest, and that, in consideration of their services, they will be kindly dealt with. This, however, is not a certainty, but a dismal Democratic rumor, growing more dismal every day. That he will take care of his political friends, so far as he can, is a certainty, and it is said he has already selected for appointment those whose official relations will be nearest to him. He has not many appointments in his gift. Aside from his own office, there are the bell-ringers and some few trifling other appointments. His political relations with the Common Council prevent any successful action as to the different heads of Departments appointed by the Mayor, even if he felt disposed to touch them. The Mayor is, comparatively, with the other heads of the City Government, without power or patronage, and this is conceded to be all wrong.

This week, Mr. GUNTHER, who had received a courteous invitation from Mayor OPDYKE, visited the Mayor's Office, and viewed the situation of which he is master. It was not a formal visit, and the Mayor and Mayor elect had a very pleasant interview. There is something of a coincidence in the fact that two years ago Mr. GUNTHER made a gallant run—three in the field—for the Mayoralty, but that His Honor, GEORGE OPDYKE, was too quick for him, winning the race, just as Mr. GUNTHER has now, contrary to all political prophecies and expectation.

Hon. THEODORE E. TOMLINSON will be one of the right-hand men of the new Municipal dynasty. This being accidentally made public, it is more than probable that he will be found out of town for this and succeeding days—hurried hence to Buffalo or elsewhere on a law-suit of long standing, in which, like unto Hon. JOHN MCKEON, he either has been or at some future day will be engaged.

The Police Relief Fund.

The report of the Treasurer of the Police Relief Fund for the nine months up to Dec. 8, contains the following statement:

To cash on hand Dec. 1, 1863	$418 86
Received during the past nine months	9,855 95
Paid out during the past nine months	9,801 50

Average amount received per month, $1,095 10; average amount paid out per month, $1,089 05; average excess of receipts per month, $6 05; number of families relieved during March was 41; April, 42; May, 40; June, 42; July, 39; August, 40; September, 37; October, 41; November, 39. Average number of families relieved per month, 40; average amount paid each family per month, $27 22.

All this is done by the Police for the families of those of deceased members, and in no case is the relief afforded insufficient. Aside of this, the force have contributed generously to the wants of the soldiers in the field, and the sick and the wounded. It is doubtful whether any organization has, proportionable to individual income, lent a more willing ear or made more generous response to the calls of benevolence.

The New-England Society.

The New-England Society of this City will celebrate their fifty-eighth anniversary by a public dinner at the Astor House, on the 22d inst. It is understood that the following distinguished gentlemen have already accepted invitations to be present as guests on the occasion, namely: Senator John P. Hale, of New-Hampshire; Hon. Henry Winter Davis, of Maryland; Rev. Henry Ward Beecher, Hon. James T. Brady, Major-Gen. John A. Dix, Rev. Dr. Francis Vinton, Prof. Roswell D. Hitchcock, Mayor Opdyke, Commodore Meade, Rev. Dr. Weston. The occasion promises to be one of unusual interest, and the gathering a numerous one.

THE VOLUNTEER FUND.—Subscriptions are coming in daily from the banks. The Bowery Savings Bank has done most liberally. The following are the additional subscriptions, making the amount of stock thus far taken $745,400: Bowery Savings Bank, $200,000; Bank of America, $100,000; Metropolitan Bank, $50,000; Tradesmen's Bank, $10,000; East River Bank, $5,000.

FRENCH DIPLOMACY.

Relations of France with Mexico and the United States.

In the collection of French diplomatic papers just published by the Government twelve documents concern American affairs. The first three are the sequel of those inserted in the collection for 1862, and give the conclusion of the negotiations on the proposal of mediation which emanated from the French Government. The first, addressed by M. DROUYN DE LHUYS, on Jan. 9, to M. MERCIER, the French Minister at Washington, dwells on the wish to see the North enter upon pacific conferences with the South; another, dated Feb. 26, is equally urgent on the same subject. Then comes an exchange of dispatches on the Mexican question. M. MERCIER writes, on April 3, that the Government of Washington will avoid giving France any cause of discontent. Then comes a very energetic letter of M. DROUYN DE LHUYS to M. MERCIER, protesting against a letter of Mr. ADAMS, the American Minister in London, and some dispatches of M. MERCIER, which relieve the Washington Cabinet of the responsibility for the same. Another dispatch of M. DROUYN DE LHUYS (Sept. 13,) gives an explanation of French policy in Mexico. France has not desired a caution either of Texas or Louisiana, or of any other territory in America. As to the recognition of the South, said to be the price of those concessions, nothing has been decided on the subject, and consequently no treaty concluded. The following is the text of the dispatch.

PARIS, Sept. 13.

Mr. DAYTON, who exhibits in his relations with me a frankness and straightforwardness which I am pleased to recognize, has been moved by certain rumors which appear of late to have found some credit at Paris, and he has come to speak to me concerning them. According to these reports, too lightly accepted, the Government of the Emperor has decided upon a recognition of the States of the South. It is even said that a treaty has been signed, by which the new Confederation would restore to France, either for herself or to hand over to Mexico, all Texas, and a part of Louisiana.

At the moment when Mr. DAYTON communicated to me this information, I found myself in a position to furnish him with intelligence in return; and before replying to the questions he addressed to me I asked him if, amongst the symptoms which menaced the friendly relations of the two countries, he had not, like myself, received other news made public; such as the dispatch of a protest on the part of his Government against our expedition to Mexico and its consequences, the conclusion of an offensive and defensive alliance between the United States and Russia, and the appearance of a Federal fleet before Vera Cruz.

With respect to the protest, after calling upon me to remark that I myself knew better than any one that none had been sent, Mr. DAYTON said that, in taking his inspirations from the correspondence of Mr. SEWARD, and from his personal knowledge of the dispositions of his countrymen, he might have spoken to me about the impression produced in his country by the preponderating intervention of a European Power in an American Republic, and by the creation of a monarchical establishment in a province of the United States; but that there was a great distance between such language and a protest or threat of any kind, and nothing in his instructions authorized him to cross that interval. Moreover, he said that he knew nothing of the pretended alliance of his country with Russia, and had every reason to discredit it. As to the arrival of a Federal fleet before Vera Cruz, he thought such a statement did not even merit the honor of a contradiction.

I told Mr. DAYTON that I never attached importance to the reports above mentioned, and that my object in citing them was much less to provoke explanations on his part, than to put him personally on his guard against those rumors of another sort, but probably proceeding from the same source, which he had brought under my notice. I could, besides, give them a categorical contradiction. As to the recognition of the States of the South, the dispositions of the Emperor were known to him, and that question was still at the same point where I had confessed it to be. We had not then recognized the South, and a fortiori, we had not signed with it any treaty about a cession of Texas and Louisiana. On this subject, I could repeat to him what I had often said, viz.: that we did not seek, either for ourselves or for others, any acquisition in America. I added, that I hoped the good sense of the people of the United States would repudiate all the exaggerations and false suppositions by which it was sought to mislead and embitter public opinion; and that I relied on his collaboration to propagate a more equitable appreciation of our intentions, and of the necessities to which our policy was subject.

I have thought it proper that you should be informed of the details of this conversation, in order that you may, on your part, communicate them to Mr. SEWARD, and make them a text for rectifying false judgments and unwarranted prejudices in your neighborhood. DROUYN DE LHUYS.

The nine others are dispatches from the French Minister of Foreign Affairs to the French Representative at Washington, bearing on the orders given by the Federal Government to its cruisers, on the complaints made against the contracting of a Confederate loan in Europe, and on the intentions attributed to the Cabinet of Washington with regard to events in Mexico.

The Mexican question only contributes three documents. Two of them were addressed, on the 14th and 17th of August, to Gen. BAZAINE, named Commander-in-Chief of the French forces; they recapitulate to him the Emperor's intentions from the first intervention of France in Mexico. The third is dated 15th October. It announces to Gen. BAZAINE that the Minister of Foreign Affairs has concerted with his colleagues of War and of the Marine to fix the war indemnity to be demanded from Mexico. The document is thus worded:

PARIS, Oct. 15.

GENERAL: I have put myself in communication, as I had already informed you that I intended to do, with my colleagues of the Departments of the War, Navy, and Finances, for the purpose of fixing the war indemnity, the reimbursement of which we shall have to claim of Mexico. The different details which were indispensable to enable us to estimate correctly the total of our expenses, are now in our possession. We shall in consequence shortly be able to definitely fix the sum to which that indemnity will amount. We had also to consider the expenses which will also be incurred before our forces have completely evacuated the Mexican territory. I have also consulted my colleagues on that subject, and I shall be, according to all probability, in a position to deliver to the Marquis de MONTHOLON, at the moment of his departure, the necessary instructions to enable him to negotiate those two questions immediately on his arrival in the City of Mexico.

CRIME IN LONDON.

Mysterious Murder in London—The Detection of Crime.

From the London Times.

Paris has no monopoly of mysteries. Nothing that EUGENE SUE has imagined can surpass the story of the triple murder in a four-wheeled cab at the door of a public house, in a crowded thoroughfare, on a busy Saturday night. If there was a Morgue in London, what would have been the sensations of the public at the exhibition of these three bodies, unowned and unknown, taken out of a hackney carriage by a Policeman and a Surgeon! It does, however, speak well for society that this murder should have been discovered by the simplest and most natural of means—by the gap which the victims left in their own little circle of friends. At any rate, a mother and two children were not made away with without being missed. The poor creatures had their own place in the society of this city, vast as it is, and when that place was empty suspicion was aroused. But for this, it is terrible to think how complete the mystery might have remained. The murderer had time to put hundreds of miles between himself and the scene of his crime. The contents of the cab, strange to say, would have furnished no clue to the perpetrator of the atrocity. These lay three dead bodies, with the luggage which women and children might carry for a short journey—a small bundle, a leather box containing a few eatables for the children on the road, shawls, &c. Yet it happened that in all this there was nothing to put the Police on the track. Only one article of linen was marked, and that not with the initials of the owner. No accurate impression had been left even of the appearance of the murderer. The witness thought he had worn a moustache, but it seems that he was mistaken. Nothing led to the discovery except the published description of the bodies, which answered all the purposes of those horrible exposures in the Morgue. The neighbors of the victims recognized the sketch, the more readily, perhaps, from the juxtaposition of the three figures, and then the truth became known. Upward of a century ago a most barbarous murder was discovered by similar means, though after a shocking fashion. A woman killed her husband, cut off his head to prevent the identification of the body, and threw it into the Thames. There it was found floating the next morning, and employed to bring the guilt home to the offender. But in those days there were no organs of publicity disseminating information through every grade of society, and so the magistrates extemporised, as it were, a Morgue for the occasion. They ordered the head to be washed and combed, and stuck upon a pole in the churchyard of St. Margaret, Westminster. By the side of the ghastly object was stationed an officer charged to observe the countenances of all who came to gaze on it, and arrest those who evinced any suspicious emotion. It was not in that primitive fashion, however, that evidence was obtained, but in the course of a day or two the neighbours of the victims did recognize his features, and the woman expiated her crime, according to the law of those days, at the stake. We must now observe that this is not the only, perhaps not the most extraordinary story of mystery lately disclosed. In the middle of the Summer, while happy tourists were enjoying themselves, and great towns were half emptied of their industrious inmates, a discovery was made which almost exceeds in horror the spectacle at the bottom of that railway cab. In a small house at Wolverhampton the corpse of a man was found lying on a bed in an upstairs room. The head had been frightfully battered, and was soaking in a pool of blood. The body had been coated with tar, for the obvious purpose of retarding decomposition, but no much time has elapsed before it was found, and the heat of the weather had been so great, that the coverlid had failed, and the sight was a dreadful one. There was no living occupant of the house, the door had been fast locked, and was broken open by the Police. Exactly at the same time, in another house, quite unoccupied, at Dudley, half a dozen miles off, was found the corpse of a woman. The body too, lay on a bed, shockingly decomposed, but the dress and the hands of the woman were stained with tar, and in the pocket of her dress was discovered the key of the house which contained the body of the man. A lancaster bottle beneath its lids seemed to tell the tale of suicide, but was the suicide the sequel of a murder? That was the natural inference, but beyond such inference the conclusion could not be carried. It was proved that the woman had once cohabited with the man; that she had quarreled with him, and that she had cohabited with others. These revelations suggested a belief that she had been at least an accomplice in the murder, and that she had destroyed her own life afterward, but no proofs of the facts could be obtained, and an open verdict of the Coroner's jury terminated the case of the Wolverhampton and Dudley mysteries. But how many mysteries are there without even that much of a clue to their solution? Did the reader observe, a few days ago, the same morning reports of the last deed of murder in the cab? It very probably escaped his notice, and, if not, he would have concluded that such an act was very probable in a country where, as we said, not so long ago, a decapitated murderer was exposed on the spot. The bodies had hardly been taken out of the cab when a suicide was announced from Bermondsey. A man had just been found dead in a bed at a coffee-house with poison by his side, and that time appeared to fit so exactly that the cabman was hurried off to the house to look at the body. It was not the body sought; but fresh chances turned up every minute. All through Sunday and Monday the cabman was taken about to various parts of the Metropolitan Police district that he might "identify bodies supposed to include that of the missing man." But to render this proceeding of the slightest utility, all these "bodies" must have been discovered under circumstances consistent with the hypothesis entertained in other words, they must have been bodies of men who had come by an untimely and unexplained end, since 9 o'clock on Saturday evening. Is there actually such a crop of mysteries? Are we really to suppose that on any day of the week a dozen or half-a-dozen fresh corpses may be produced, each of which, for all that anybody knows, may represent the perpetrator of a murder twenty-four hours before? It deserves notice, however, that the present mystery, now that it has been revealed, contains nothing but the most ordinary story of domestic jealousies and unhappiness. A more commonplace tale, except for the catastrophe, could not be imagined. A man conceives an aversion for his wife, whether with or without reason it is impossible to say. He determines to rid himself of what he considers a burden; but then he devises the strangest, the boldest, and most incredible scheme ever known. He makes arrangements with his wife to drive with the children to a railway station in a cab and pick him up on her way. At the station she takes another cab, stops at a public house in a crowded street for a pint of porter, in which he administers poison to mother and daughters together, sits beside them till they are quite dead, and then gets out with directions to the cabman to go on with his load to the other end of London! Such a murder, so planned and executed, may well astound the public mind, and account for a sensation which we have not seen exceeded since the days of RUSH or MANNING.

GEN. BUTLER AND THE BLACKS.

A Characteristic Discussion of Negro Rights, Duties and Privileges—The "Best Use of an Able Bodied Colored Man During the War is to be a Soldier"—Regulations for the Government of Contrabands.

HEADQUARTERS EIGHTEENTH ARMY CORPS, DEPARTMENT OF VIRGINIA AND NORTH CAROLINA, FORT MONROE, VA., Dec. 5, 1863.

GENERAL ORDERS, No. 46.—The recruitment of colored troops has become the settled purpose of the Government. It is therefore the duty of every officer and soldier to aid in carrying out that purpose, by every proper means, irrespective of personal predilection. To do this effectually, the former condition of the blacks; their change of relation; the new rights acquired by them; the new obligations imposed upon them; the duty of the Government to them; the great stake they have in the war; and the claims their ignorance, and the helplessness of their women and children, make upon each of us, no matter how higher grade in social and political life, must all be carefully considered.

It will also be taken into account that the colored soldiers have none of the machinery of "State aid" for the support of their families while fighting our battles, so liberally provided for the white soldiers, nor the generous bounties given by the State and National Governments to the loyal States—although this last is far more than compensated to the black man by the great boon awarded to him, the result of the war—FREEDOM FOR HIMSELF AND HIS RACE FOREVER!

To deal with these several aspects of this subject, so that as few of the negroes as possible shall become chargeable either upon the bounty of Government or the charities of the benevolent, and at the same time to do justice to those who shall enlist, to encourage enlistment, and to cause all capable of working to employ themselves for their support, and that of their families—either in arms or other service—and that the rights of negroes and the Government may both be protected, it is ordered:

1. In this Department, after the 1st day of December, instant, and until otherwise ordered, every able-bodied colored man who shall enlist and be mustered into the service of the United States, shall receive during the war, shall be paid as bounty, to supply his personal wants, the sum of ten (10) dollars. And it shall be the duty of each mustering officer to return to these headquarters duplicate rolls of recruits so enlisted and mustered into the service, on the 10th, 20th and last days of each month, so that the bounty may be promptly paid and accounted for.

2. To the family of each colored soldier so enlisted and mustered, so long as he shall remain in the service and behave well, shall be furnished suitable subsistence, under the direction of the Superintendents of Negro Affairs, or their Assistants; and each soldier shall be furnished with a certificate of subsistence for his family, as soon as he is mustered; and any soldier deserting or whose pay and allowances are forfeited by Court-martial, shall be reported by his Captain to the Superintendent of the District where his family lives, and the subsistence may be stopped—provided that such subsistence shall be continued by at least six months to the family of any colored soldier who shall die in the service by disease, wounds or battle.

3. Every enlisted colored man shall have the same uniform, clothing, arms, equipments, camp-equipage, rations, medical and hospital treatment as are furnished to the United States soldiers of his arm, of the service, unless some material modification thereof shall be granted from these Headquarters.

4. The pay of the colored soldiers shall be ten (10) dollars per month—three of which may be retained for clothing. But the non-commissioned officers, whether colored or white, shall have the same addition to their pay as other non-commissioned officers. It is, however, hoped, and believed by the Commanding General, that Congress, as an act of justice, will increase the pay of the colored troops to a uniform rate with other troops of the United States. He can see no reason why a colored soldier should be asked to fight upon less pay than any other soldier. The colored man fills the equal space in rank while he lives, and an equal grave when he falls.

5. It appears by returns from the several recruiting officers that enlistments are discouraged, and the Government is competing against itself, because of the payment of some larger bounties than the pay of the colored soldiers to the enlisted people in the several Staff Departments, and that, too, while the charities of the Government and individuals are supporting the families of the laborer. It is further ordered: That no officer or other person on behalf of the Government, or to be paid by the Government, on land in this Department, shall employ or hire any colored man drawn from a master, at more than dollars per month, without rations, except that mechanics and skilled laborers may be employed at other rates—regard being had, however, to the pay of the soldier in fixing such rates.

6. The best use during the war for an able-bodied colored man, is well for himself as the country, is to be a soldier; it is therefore further ordered: That no colored man, between the ages of eighteen and forty-five, who can pass the Surgeon's examination for a soldier, shall be employed on land by any person in behalf of the Government—mechanics and skilled laborers alone excepted; and it shall be the duty of each officer or other person employing colored labor in this Department to be paid by or on behalf of the Government, to cause each laborer to be examined by the Surgeons detailed to examine colored recruits, who shall furnish the laborer with a certificate of disability or ability, as the case may be, and after the first day of January next, no employment rolls of colored laborers will be certified or presented at these Headquarters wherein this order has not been complied with, and are not vouched for by such certificate of disability of the employee. And whenever hereafter a colored employe of the Government shall not be paid within sixty days after his wages shall become due and payable, the officer or other person having the funds to make such payment shall be dismissed the service, subject to the approval of the President.

7. Promptness of payment of labor, and the facilities furnished by the Government and the benevolent, will enable colored laborers in the service of the Government to be supported from the proceeds of their labor: Therefore no subsistence will be furnished to the families of those employed by the Government at labor, but the Superintendent of Negro Affairs may issue certificates to those so employed, and charge the amount against their wages, and furnish the officer in charge of payment of such laborers with the amounts so issued, on the first day of each month, or he himself chargeable with the amount so issued.

8. Political freedom rightly defined is liberty to work, and to be protected in the full enjoyment of the fruits of labor, and no one with ability to work should enjoy the fruits of another's labor. Therefore, no subsistence will be permitted to any negro or his family, with whom he lives, who is able to work and does not work. It is, therefore, the duty of the Superintendent of Negro Affairs to furnish employment to all the negroes able to labor, and see that their families are supplied with the necessaries of life. Any negro who refuses to work when able, and neglects his family, will be arrested and reported to these Headquarters, to be sent to labor on the fortifications, where he will be made to work. No negro will be required to labor on the Sabbath, unless upon the most urgent necessity.

9. The Commanding General is informed that officers and soldiers in the Department have, by impressment and force, compelled the labor of negroes, sometimes for private use, and often without any impression upon them of their duties. Therefore it is ordered: That no officer or soldier shall impress or force to labor for any private purpose whatever, any negro; and negro labor shall not be impressed or forced for any public purpose, unless under orders from these headquarters, or process of impressive military necessity, and where the labor of white citizens would be compelled, if not a negro. And any order of any officer compelling any labor by negroes or white citizens shall be forthwith reported to these headquarters, and the reasons which called for the necessity for such order fully set forth.

10. In case of a necessity compelling negro or white labor on the margin of building fortifications, bridges, roads, or aiding transportation or other military purposes, it shall be the duty of the Superintendent of Negroes in that District to cause employment rolls to be made of those so compelled to labor, and to present said rolls, as soon as the necessity ceases, to the Assistant-Quartermaster of the District, that the laborers may be paid, and the Superintendent shall see that those thus labor shall have proper subsistence, and may receive the Commissary of Subsistence rations therefor. Any officer offending willfully against the provisions of this order, will be dismissed the service, subject to the approval of the President.

11. The negroes shall be impressed into military service of the United States, except under orders from these headquarters—by a draft, which shall equally apply to the white and colored citizens.

12. The theory upon which negroes are received into the Union lines, and employed, either as laborers or soldiers, or that every negro able to work who leaves the rebel lines, diminishes by so much the producing power of the rebellion to supply itself with food and labor necessary to be done outside of military operations, to sustain its armies; and the United States thereby gains either a soldier or a producer. Women and children are received, because it would be manifestly iniquitous and inhuman to cause the husband and father and leave the wife and child to ill-treatment and starvation. Women and children are also received when unaccompanied by the husband and father, because the negro has the domestic affections in as strong a degree as the white man, and however degraded, the master may drive him, he will return or leave home to his family.

13. The rebellion is a war against the United States, and the negro which are unconscionable and injurious, and that such contracts are fulfilled by the negro shall be paid; to take charge of all lands and all property abandoned, turned over, or given to the use of the negroes, whether by Government or by charity; to keep accurate accounts of the same, and of all expenditures; to audit all accounts of the negroes against Government, and to have all proper allowances made as well to the negro as the Government; and to have all claims put in train for payment by the Government; to keep accurate accounts of all expenses of the negro to the Government, and of his earnings for the Government; to see that the negroes who have brought on land furnished by the Government on shares, shall have their just portion, and to aid in disposing of the same for the best good of the negro and Government; to make quarterly returns and exhibits of all accounts of matters committed to them; and to hold all monies arising from the surplus earnings of the negro over the expenditures by the United States for the use and benefit of the negroes, under orders from these Headquarters.

14. It appearing to the Commanding General that some of the labor done by the negroes in this department remains unpaid—some for the space of more than two years, although contracts were duly made by the proper officers of the Government for the payment therefor—whereby the faith of the negro in the justice of the Government is impaired, and the trust in its protection is weakened, it is ordered, that each Superintendent shall be a Commissioner, to audit all such accounts, procure evidence of their validity, make out accurate pay-rolls, and return the same, so that they may be presented for adjustment to the proper departments. Provided, however, that no sale of any such claim against the Government shall be valid, and no such claim shall be paid except to the person actually earning it—if he is within this Department—or to his legal representative, if the person earning it be deceased.

15. Religious, benevolent and humane persons have come into this Department for the charitable purpose of giving to the negroes secular and religious instruction; and this, too, without any adequate pay or material reward. It is, therefore, ordered, that every officer and soldier shall treat all such persons with the utmost respect; shall aid them by all proper means, in their laudable avocations; and that transportation be furnished them, whenever it may be necessary in pursuit of their business.

16. As it is important to preserve uniformity of system, and that information shall be had as to the needs and the supplies for the negro, and as certain authorizations are had to raise troops in the Department, a practice has grown up of corresponding directly with the War and other Departments of the Government, to the manifest injury of the service: It is therefore ordered, That all correspondence in relation to the raising or recruitment of colored troops, and relating to the care and control of the negroes in this Department, with any official organized body or society, or any Department or Bureau of the Government, must be transmitted through these Headquarters, as by regulation all other military correspondence is required to be done.

18. Courts-martial and Courts of Inquiry in relation to all offences committed by, or against any of the colored troops, or any person in the service of the United States connected with the care, or serving with the colored troops, shall have a majority of its members composed of officers in command of colored troops, when such can be detailed without manifest injury

Supplement to The New-York Times.

NEW-YORK, SATURDAY, DECEMBER 12, 1863.

NEWS FROM CHARLESTON.

SINKING OF THE MONITOR WEEHAWKEN.

DROWNING OF THIRTY OF HER CREW.

The Steamship Fulton Captures Another Prize.

By the arrival at this port last evening of the steamship Fulton, Capt. Worsus, from Port Royal Dec. 6, we have the painful news of the loss of the monitor Weehawken. She entirely sank at her anchorage off Morris Island during a gale on the 6th inst. Thirty of her crew were lost, including four assistant engineers. Her Captain was on board the flagship when the accident occurred, and all the other officers, except the four engineers, were saved.

No damage was sustained by any other of the iron-clads.

The Fulton brings a large number of passengers from Port Royal. On the 6th instant she went up to Stono Bar, and was ordered back to Hilton Head by Gen. GILLMORE, to receive on board Gen. FOSTER, but he not having arrived there on the 6th, left for this port—we were then short of coal.

Gen. BERNARD had arrived at Folly Island to take command of his brigade and Hilton Head.

The Fulton has captured another prize. The following is an abstract of her log:

Dec. 6, off Wilmington, N. C., at 7:15 A. M., made a small schooner, one point on the port-bow, steering the same course as ourselves. From her rig and appearance, judged her to be an English vessel. At 8:45 A.M., being near, and she showing no colors, fired a gun, (blank,) when she immediately hove to, still showing no colors. Sent a boat on board with the first officer and purser to examine her papers. A few minutes after the boat returned with the papers. Upon examination of her documents proved she was the schooner G. G. Bigelow, from Bermuda, bound to Beaufort, N. C., with 40 tons of salt as ballast. Register and clearance from Bermuda approved all right. She had no manifest as yet made out, and none of her papers. Had the American Consul's certificate or signature, evidently something was wrong; put a prize crew on board, consisting of one mate and four men; transferred her crew on board of the Fulton and took her in tow, and proceeded on our course for New-York. The schooner was about 90 tons, and 20 years old, as reported by the master, and is in a very dilapidated condition. During the night the wind and sea increased.

Dec. 10.—At 2:20 A. M. the officer in charge of the schooner made the sight signal to stop, which was immediately done. We backed down to her, when he informed us the schooner was leaking badly in her upper works forward, and as the rate we were going it would be impossible to keep her free. Started the steamer again at less than half speed, the wind and sea increasing fast. In the morning, he at 6 A. M., stopped and sent two men on board of the schooner to help in pumping, and to have a more thorough examination of the cargo, after which we proceeded on very slowly; at 1:30 P. M., the schooner hoisted a signal of distress; stopped at once and boarded her. The officer in charge reported it was impossible to keep her free, going head to the sea, and the men would not remain on board any longer. She was seaworthy to with a free wind, and there was nothing on board of her as cargo but the salt. Capt. WORSUS thereupon had a consultation, and in consideration that his voyage had been protracted by the detention of the steamer at Hilton Head two days, and he having important dispatches on board, and finding the schooner unfit to navigate to the north of Hatteras in her present condition, and not being able to spare his officers or men to carry her into some Southern port, in possession of the Government concluded to give the vessel up to her crew, the vessel and cargo being of trifling value; the chances of her running the blockade being very small, having the English rig, which would be immediately proven to any American cruiser. Consequently, after having a thorough examination of the vessel, put the crew on board, and at 2:30 P. M., let her go about her business. The captain and crew were allowed the privilege to examine for themselves, and with their own free will took charge of the schooner again.

We are indebted to J. MCMANUS, Esq., purser of the Fulton for favors.

DEPARTMENT OF THE SOUTH.

The News of Grant's Victories—Effect of Shelling Charleston—A National Salute.

FOLLY ISLAND, S. C., Sunday, Dec. 6, 1863.

The highly exciting and cheerful intelligence of GRANT's success, which we discover in the Northern papers, totally eclipses in point of interest any information that can be forwarded from this department. The fact that BRAGG had sustained a disastrous defeat was made known to us at an early date through rebel papers, and, as may be readily conceived, sent a thrill of delight to the heart of every one who heard it. The confirmation of the news by the Northern press, together with additional particulars, caused the entire camp to break forth in wild shouts of exultation.

MILITARY OPERATIONS

connected exclusively with this Department cannot be said to have arrived at a very forward state in consequence, as I have had occasion to previously write, of the inexplainable inaction of the navy. At long intervals throughout the day and night the ear is greeted with the sound of a single gun, fired either from our batteries or those of the enemy. The pickets guarding the islands north of Folly Island are within talking distance of the rebel pickets, but a mutual understanding prevents one from harming the other. The Union batteries, including all on the islands near Charleston occupied by our troops, are of a formidable character and are strongly garrisoned. The enemy's works on the surrounding islands are, we have every reason to believe, in an equally effective state of defence. A number of shells were thrown into Charleston during the week, and we can safely venture the assertion, that the citizens and soldiery inhabiting that city, did not view the descent of the missiles with anything like the calmness their papers from time to time labor to induce us to believe. GILLMORE's rifled cannon turned toward the city, have had the effect to keep the rebels in a constant state of alarm and dread, notwithstanding the repeated asseverations of the Charleston editors to the contrary. They may console themselves by calling the shells a fine pyrotechnic display, not to be considered of great importance, but at the same time we have positive proof that not a shell has exploded over the city without causing the people therein to tremble with the utmost fear. Charleston papers of a recent date contain scores of advertisements announcing the removal of business firms from the lower to the upper portion of the city. The Charleston Hotel is already closed, and notice is given that the Mills House will shortly follow the example. The alleged reason assigned for thus closing two of once the most fashionable hotels in the South, is the great destitution of provisions of all kinds essential to conduct the establishments in a manner agreeable even to the unfastidious taste of the guests. The congregations of two churches pointedly invite the congregation of a third to join it in religious worship, for the reason that the edifices of the former are subject to danger from our shells. Nearly all the wharves situated in the vicinity of the piers are emptied of goods and abandoned. The aged, women and children have, with few exceptions, fled the city, and but a small number either of civilians or soldiers are to be seen on promenade. Such are the evidences we have of the effect of our shells. Destitution and consternation to a reign supreme in the accursed city, and the late achievements of GRANT in his rear will not fail to mollify the excited feelings of the populace.

A FAUXBRAS SALUTE.

On Tuesday last, the artist of Gen. GILLMORE, the commanders of the various batteries and artillery companies fired a national salute of thirty-five guns in honor of the splendid victory of Gen. GRANT. The firing commenced at 12 M., and lasted for about one hour. The field artillery was placed in position on the beach and fired blank cartridges. It was otherwise, however, with the heavy artillery mounted in Forts Putnam, Strong and other Works on Morris Island, it being the design of Gen. GILLMORE to further acquaint the enemy with the superiority of his pieces and the skill of his gunners, while he rejoiced over his late defeat at Chattanooga. Not a gun was changed from its direct bearing on the rebel forts. Every rebel work received more or less shots from our pieces until the salute ended. Neither did Charleston itself escape the compliments paid that day to JEFF. DAVIS and his minions. Fort Putnam took special care that the explosion of a dozen shells, at least, should resound over the heads of the frightened inhabitants. Whether the rebels examined the significancy of the firing we know not, but we are certain they were greatly surprised at hearing the simultaneous reports of so many guns; and, judging from their hesitancy to reply, they must have anticipated an attack, and hardly knew at which point to concentrate their troops. Before the firing had ceased on our part, the rebel batteries on James Island opened a return fire on Morris Island, which was soon after followed by the batteries on Sullivan's Island. Only the ordinary exchange of shots occurred after the salute had been given.

THE CAPTURED STEAMER CHESAPEAKE.

She is Reported to be at St. Mary's Short of Coal.

Gunboats on Her Track, and Her Seizure To-day Probable.

Arrival of Captain Willetts and Crew at Portland, Me.

COPY OF INSTRUCTIONS TO THE PIRATES.

PORTLAND, Friday, Dec. 11.

Collector WASHBURNE has just received the following from Halifax:

"The Chesapeake is at St. Mary's destitute of coal. Gunboats will take her if there to-morrow."

The Vice-Consul at Halifax telegraphs Collector WASHBURNE, that a steamer is in Shelbourne answering the description of the Chesapeake. She attempted to coal at Halifax last night. The Government was applied to but no encouragement was given for want of evidence of murder committed. An affidavit of the charge would be made to-day. The crown officer was deliberating upon it.

The gunboat Acacia was hauled up on the dock to-day, and one side examined without finding the leak. The water in her would not run out.

The gunboat Agenoria, hence in pursuit of the Chesapeake, arrived at Rockland to-day, short of coal. She awaits orders.

The steamer New-England arrived this evening from St. John, bringing Capt. WILLETS and a portion of the crew of the Chesapeake; all of whom, with the exception of the mate, who is badly wounded, proceeded to Boston.

Capt. WILLETS reports having met two steamers bound east, undoubtedly in pursuit of the pirates—both side-wheel steamers. He also reports that all the persons engaged in the capture of the Chesapeake passed from St. John to Boston in the steamer New-England but a few days ago, and most of them were undoubtedly provincial.

Capt. WILLETS furnishes the following copy of the order of the Captain of the pirate Retribution to the officers detached to capture the Chesapeake.

To Lieut. Jno. Clibbon Braine:

You are hereby ordered to proceed to the City of New-York, with the following: First Lieut. H. A. PAGE, Second Lieut. DAVID COLINS, Sailing Master GEORGE REDMOND, and crew of eleven men. You will on arrival engage passage on board the steamer, and use your discretion as to the proper time and place to capture. Your action towards the crew and passengers will be strictly in accordance with the President's instructions. You will, as circumstances will permit, bring your prize to the Island of Grand Menan for further orders. Seal Cove Harbor, if accessible. (Signed) JNO. PARKER, Captain privateer Retribution.

THE WAR IN VIRGINIA.

Movements of Mosby's and White's Guerrillas.

WASHINGTON, Friday, Dec. 11.

About one hundred of MOSBY'S and WHITE'S guerrillas appeared in the vicinity of Lovettsville about midnight of the 6th inst.

They took old Dr. SHAFFER from his bed and demanded his watch and hat. They took his hat from his head and then released him.

The neighborhood is full of guerrillas.

MOSBY was with the gang which visited Lovettsville. His headquarters are at Markham, on the railroad, in Fauquier County.

Markham is west of Oak Hill, on the Manassas Railroad.

These guerrillas were in full Federal uniform. They are watching our forage and transportation wagons very closely, and are ready at all times to take advantage of circumstances.

GEN. BANKS' DEPARTMENT.

Arrival at New-Orleans of the Prisoners Taken at Mustang Island—Gen. Hamilton's Movements.

CAIRO, Friday, Dec. 11.

The steamer McClellan, which arrived at New-Orleans on the 3d inst., brought the rebel prisoners that were captured at Mustang Island; among them were a number of officers.

Gen. HAMILTON, Military Governor of Texas, reached Brazos on the 2d inst., and would enter upon the duties of his office as soon as possible.

THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

Gen. Meade's Official Report Sent in—Winter Quarters.

WASHINGTON, Saturday, Dec. 11.

Accounts received to-night from the Army of the Potomac say, that all reports to the effect that Gen. MEADE has been superseded were unfounded, at least, up to a late hour last night, as far as was known at headquarters. Gen. MEADE, the day before yesterday, forwarded his report of the recent movement south of the Rapidan to the War Department. It is confidently believed it will be satisfactory to the Cabinet. His late retrograde movement is fully indorsed by almost every officer in the army. All the corps are busily engaged in making themselves comfortable. Beyond this no active operations are visible.

THE REBEL FLEET.

The steamship Canada, from Liverpool at 9 o'clock on the morning of the 29th, via Queenstown on the 30th of November, arrived here at 4 o'clock this afternoon, bringing dates two days later than those already received. The steamship City of Washington, from New-York, reached Liverpool at midnight on the 26th ult., and the Nova Scotian, from Quebec on the 27th. The steamship China, from New-York, arrived at Queenstown on the 29th.

The Confederate steamer Georgia had gone into dock at Cherbourg to repair some minor damages.

The steamer Rappahannock, under the Confederate flag, and pierced for eight guns, sailed from Sheerness, Eng., on the 25th ult., in an unfinished state, having a gang of carpenters on board, and arrived at Calais the same day. The vessel was at once seized by the French customs authorities, but was not long detained, and her Captain has permission to leave port whenever he pleases. The Rappahannock was formerly Her Majesty's steam-sloop Victor, and was sold with three other steamers a few weeks ago. The three latter are English war steamers, and are reported to be fitting out in the Thames for Confederate privateers.

GREAT BRITAIN.

In pursuance of President LINCOLN'S Proclamation, the Americans in London observed the 26th of November as a day of Thanksgiving. Business was suspended at the American Legation and Consulates, and a grand banquet was given at St. James' Hall, under the Presidency of Robert J. WALKER.

The banquet was attended by Mr. ADAMS, the Secretaries of the Legation, and many prominent Americans. Mr. LINCOLN'S Proclamation was read, and Mr. WALKER delivered an address on the rebellion and the prospects of its speedy suppression.

A prayer was offered up by Mr. STORRS MARTIN, a fugitive slave, and a hymn was sung by the guests.

A toast to the President was received with great enthusiasm, and was responded to by Mr. ADAMS, who noticed some of the objections urged against the proclamation, and pointed out the various causes for thanksgiving which existed. He said that every American felt that this was the time of national, but it was to be regarded as much of a necessary evil as if it had been an earthquake or an inundation. Under these circumstances all they had to do was to apply themselves promptly to the perfection of the remedy and the restoration of the Union. This could only be done through perseverance in the war. He enumerated the great things which had been accomplished since the rebellion broke out. The Government at that time was almost disintegrated—now it is solid and firm—able to act with vigor and effect whenever and however it pleased. The people have rallied round the Government and maintained the policy of the President. They have money, they have men, and they have ideas which they mean to establish on the only true and successful conclusion of the struggle. We now stand firmly and have every reliance, that the Government is now able and the people willing to go through the trial triumphantly. The Emancipation Proclamation and enlistment of negro troops, are the two great instruments by which emancipation without revolution will be carried out. And here we are now at the end of two years and a half having made slow but regular progress in this movement until it has taken shape distinctly before us, so that we can foresee the ultimate issue. Mr. ADAMS concluded by eulogizing the honesty and fidelity of Mr. LINCOLN.

Numerous other patriotic toasts were then drunk and responded to.

Mr. SPENCE, of Liverpool, the writer on secession in the London Times, has been addressing large meetings in Glasgow in favor of Southern independence. He urged that England should take the lead in inviting the European Powers to intervene in the American war.

The Southern Independence Association of Manchester have invited Mr. CORNELIS JAWARS to deliver an address before them during December. Mr. JAWARS accepted, conditional on his not being confined to the subject of the Southern right to independence, nor compromised as a Southern supporter.

The English Funds on the 27th were dull. Money was in abundant supply, and easy, but the demand at the Bank was rather more active.

THE EUROPEAN CONGRESS.

The reply of Russia to the Emperor NAPOLEON'S invitation to the European Congress was delivered on the 26th of November.

It is denied that Russia demands that the programme of the Congress shall be drawn up. Prince GORTSCHAKOFF has sent an explanatory note with a formal reply to the Emperor.

Switzerland sent a direct acceptance, but will communicate its reservoe.

Advices from Paris hint that England's refusal may lead France to form a new and more intimate alliance elsewhere.

The official correspondence between France and England relative to the Congress is published. It fully agrees with the version already given. England first asked for the programme and when it was given replied in effect that the Congress would not produce the desired results, but perhaps make matters worse.

Some Paris journals censure the policy of England in holding aloof from the Congress.

THE REBELLION IN SAN DOMINGO.

The steamship Eagle arrived here yesterday, from Havana. She brings the following interesting intelligence from San Domingo:

HAVANA, Saturday, Dec. 5.

On the 24 the following telegram was received here from Villa Olaro—pretending to copy news given by the Diaro de Santiago de Cuba, as follows:

"Long live the Queen. Over three hundred of the rebels (of St. Domingo, I presume, though we are not told where or when,) have delivered themselves up to Gen. SANTANA and to Gen. GANDARA. The unfortunately famous BENITO ROJAS, as also two other heads of the rebellion have been captured in Hayti and are at the disposition of our Government. Two other chiefs have presented themselves to Gen. VARGAS, and made important disclosures. The mob gives in to the valor of our soldiers."

The Diaro here makes no comment and altogether it is better to wait for confirmation ere giving this report implicit credence.

NIL DESPERANDUM.

The Confederate Congress opened its sessions at Richmond on Monday last, and at noon of Tuesday, the following Message was received from His Excellency JEFF. DAVIS:

To the Senate and House of Representatives of the Confederate States:

The necessity for legislative action, arising out of the important events that have marked the interval since your adjournment, and my desire to have the aid of your counsel on other matters of grave public interest, render your presence at this time more than ordinarily welcome. Indeed, but for serious obstacles to convoking you in extraordinary session, and the necessity for my own temporary absence from the seat of Government, I would have invited you to an earlier meeting than that fixed at the date of your adjournment.

Grave reverses befell our arms soon after your departure from Richmond. Early in July our strongholds at Vicksburgh and Port Hudson, together with their entire garrisons, capitulated to the combined land and naval forces of the enemy. The important interior position of Jackson next fell into their temporary possession. Our unsuccessful assault on the post at Helena was followed, at a later period, by the invasion of Arkansas, and the retreat of our army from Little Rock gave to the enemy the control of the important valley in which it is situated.

The resolute spirit of the people soon rose superior to the temporary disaster naturally resulting from these reverses. The gallant troops, so ably commanded in the States beyond the Mississippi, inflicted repeated defeats on the invading armies in Louisiana and on the coast of Texas. Detachments of troops and active bodies of partisans kept up so effective a war on the Mississippi River as practically to destroy its value as an avenue of commerce.

The determined and successful defence of Charleston against the land and naval operations of the enemy afforded an inspiring example of our ability to repel the attacks even of the iron-clad fleet on which they chiefly rely; while on the Northern frontier our success was still more marked.

The able commander, who conducted the campaign in Virginia, determined to meet the threatened advance on Richmond, for which the enemy had made long and costly preparations, by forcing their armies to cross the Potomac and fight in defence of their own capital and homes. Transferring the battlefield to their own soil, he succeeded in compelling their rapid retreat from Virginia, and in the hard fought battle of Gettysburgh inflicted such severity of punishment as disabled them from early renewal of the campaign as originally projected. Unfortunately, the communications on which our General relied for receiving his supplies of munitions were interrupted by extraordinary floods, which so swelled the Potomac as to render impassable the fords by which his advance had been made, and he was thus forced to a withdrawal, which was conducted with deliberation, after securing large trains of captured supplies, and with a constant but unaccepted leader of battle. On more than one occasion the enemy has since made demonstrations of a purpose to advance, invariably followed by a precipitate retreat to intrenched lines on the approach of our forces.

The effective check thus opposed to the advance of invaders at all points, was such as to afford hope of their early expulsion from portions of the territory previously occupied by them, when the country was painfully surprised by the intelligence that the officer in command of Cumberland Gap had surrendered that important and easily defensible pass without firing a shot, upon the summons of a force still believed to have been inadequate to its reduction, and when reinforcements were within supporting distance, and had been ordered to his aid. The entire garrison, including the commander, being still held prisoners by the enemy, I am unable to suggest any explanation of this disaster, which laid open Eastern Tennessee and South-western Virginia to hostile operations, and broke the line of communication between the seat of Government and Middle Tennessee. This easy success of the enemy was followed by an advance of Gen. ROSECRANS into Georgia, and our army evacuated Chattanooga and availed itself of the opportunity thus afforded of winning on the field of Chickamauga one of the most brilliant and decisive victories of the war. This signal defeat of Gen. ROSECRANS was followed by his retreat into Chattanooga, where his imperilled position had the immediate effect of relieving the pressure of the invasion at other points, forcing the concentration for his relief, of large bodies of troops withdrawn from the armies in the Mississippi Valley and in Northern Virginia. The combined forces thus accumulated against us in Tennessee, so greatly outnumbered our army as to encourage the enemy to attack. After a long and severe battle, in which great carnage was inflicted on him, some of our troops inexplicably abandoned positions of great strength and by a disorderly retreat, compelled the commander to withdraw the forces elsewhere successful, and finally to retire with his whole army to a position some twenty or thirty miles to the rear. It is believed that if the troops who yielded to the assault had fought with the valor which they had displayed on previous occasions, and which was manifested in this battle on the other parts of the line, the enemy would have been repulsed with very great slaughter, and our country would have escaped the misfortune, and the army the mortification of the first defeat that has resulted from misconduct by the troops. In the meantime, the army of Gen. BURNSIDE was driven from all its field positions in Eastern Tennessee, and forced to retreat into his intrenchments at Knoxville, where, for some weeks, it was threatened with capture by the forces under Gen. LONGSTREET. No information has reached me of the final result of the operations of our commander, though intelligence has arrived of his withdrawal from that place.

While, therefore, our success in driving the enemy from our soil has not equaled the expectations confidently entertained at the commencement of the campaign, his further progress has been checked. If we are forced to regret losses in Tennessee and Arkansas, we are not without ground for congratulation on a success in Louisiana and Texas. On the sea-coast he is exhausted by vain efforts to capture our ports, while on the northern frontier he has in turn felt the pressure and dreads the renewal of invasion. The indomitable courage and perseverance of the people in the defence of their homes have been nobly attested by the unanimity with which the Legislatures of Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia have recently given expression to the popular sentiment, and like manifestations may be anticipated from all the States. Whatever chastisement may be displayed by the enemy in his desperate sacrifice of money, life and liberty in the hope of enslaving us, the experience of mankind has too conclusively shown the superior endurance of those who fight for home, liberty and independence to permit any doubt of the result.

FOREIGN RELATIONS.

I regret to inform you that there has been no improvement in the state of our relations with foreign countries since my message in January last. On the contrary, there has been a still greater divergence in the conduct of European nations from that practical impartiality which alone deserves the name of neutrality, and their action, in some cases, has assumed a character positively unfriendly.

You have heretofore been informed that, by common understanding, the initiative in all action upon the subject of this sentiment had been taken by foreign Powers to the two great maritime nations of Western Europe, and that the governments of these two nations had agreed to take no measures without previous concert. The result of these arrangements has, therefore, placed it in the power of either France or England to obstruct at pleasure the recognition to which the Confederacy is justly entitled, or even to prolong the continuance of hostilities on this side of the Atlantic, if the policy of either should be promoted by the postponement of peace. Both, too, thus became possessed of great influence to be thrown into one of the balances to the detriment of the other. I referred, at your last session, to some of the leading points in the course pursued by professed neutrals, which seemed a proper cause leaning to the side of our enemies, and events have since occurred, which induce me to renew the subject in greater detail than may then deemed necessary. In calling to your attention the action of these Governments I shall refer to the documents appended to Prudential Literature, and to their own correspondence, evidencing the true nature of their policy, and the motives which guided it. To this course no exception can be taken, inasmuch as our attention has been invited to those sources of information by their official publication.

In May, 1861, the Government of Her Britannic Majesty informed our Commissioner that it had issued a Proclamation "other than the formal recognition on the part of the Southern States," and assured him "that the sympathies of this country (Great Britain) were rather with the North than with the South."

On the 1st day of June, 1861, the same Government interdicted the use of its ports to armed ships and privateers, both of the United States and the so-called Confederate States," with these words. The Secretary of State of the United States fully appreciated the character and motive of this Proclamation, when he observed to Lord LYONS, who communicated it, "that this measure, and that of the same character which had been adopted by France, would probably prove a death-blow to Southern privateering."

On the 13th of June, 1861, the United States Minister in London informed Her Majesty's Secretary for Foreign Affairs, on the eve of his leaving for interview with the Cabinet, "that the Government had given "great dissatisfaction," and that a protraction of this relation would be viewed by the United States "as hostile in spirit, and to require some corresponding action accordingly." In response to this intimation, Her Majesty's Secretary assured the Minister that "he had no expectation of being then any more."

By proclamation, issued on the 19th and 27th April, 1861, President LINCOLN proclaimed the blockade of the entire coast of the Confederacy, extending from the Potomac to the Rio Grande, embracing, according to the returns of the United States coast survey, a coast line of three thousand five hundred and forty-nine statute miles, of which the number of rivers, bays, harbors, inlets, sounds and islets amounted to dred and eighty-nine. The navy proclamation of the United States for enforcing this blockade was stated in the report published by President LINCOLN to the Congress of the United States to consist of twenty-four vessels of all classes for examination, of which half were in distant seas. The absurdity of the pretension of such a blockade, in the face of the authoritative declaration of the maritime rights of neutrals made at Paris in 1856, was so glaring that the attempt was regarded as an experiment on the forbearance of neutral Powers, which they would promptly resist. This conclusion was justified by the fact that the Governments of France and Great Britain determined that it was necessary for their interests to abstain from both belligerents "recognizing the principle of the proper extent of neutrals." In the instructions which "confided the negotiation on this matter" to the British Consul in Charleston, he was informed that "the most perfect accord on this question exists between Her Majesty's Government and the Government of the Emperor of the French," and these instructions were accompanied by a copy of the dispatch of the British Foreign Office of the 18th of May, 1861, stating that there was no difference of opinion between Great Britain and the United States as to the validity of the principles established in the fourth article of the declaration of Paris in reference to blockades. Your predecessors in the Provisional Congress had, therefore, no difficulty in maintaining, not I am aware, any, in the instructions which authorized the first Commissioners, "that the rights of France in favor of Great Britain and France our rights to carry the property wherever found by the flags of these powers. The "assertion" desired by those Governments was understood by us to be required from both belligerents. Neutrals were exposed on our part to the exercise of belligerent right of capturing their vessels when conveying the property of our enemies. They were exposed, on the part of the United States, to interruption in their unquestioned right of trading with us by the declaration of the paper blockade above referred to. We had no reason to doubt the good faith of the proposal made to us, nor to expect that we were to be the only parties bound by its acceptance. It is true that the instructions of the neutral Powers informed their agents that it was "essential under existing circumstances that they should act with great caution in order to avoid raising the question of the recognition of the new Confederation," and that the understanding on the subject did not assume for that reason the shape of a formal Convention. But it was not deemed just by us to decline the arrangement on this ground, as little more than ninety days had then elapsed since the arrival of our Commissioners in Europe, and neutral nations were fairly entitled to a reasonable delay in acting on a subject of so much importance, and which, from their point of view, presented difficulties that we, perhaps, did not fully appreciate. Certain it is that the action of this Government on the occasion, and its faithful performance of its part, engagements have been such as to entitle it to expect on the part of those who sought its their own interest a mutual understanding, the most scrupulous adherence to their own promises. I feel constrained to inform you that in this expectation we have been disappointed, and that not only have the Governments which entered into those arrangements failed to the prohibition against commerce with us, which has been dictated by the United States in defence of the law of nations, but that this occasion of their neutral rights to our detriment has on more than one occasion been claimed in interference with our enemies as an evidence of friendly feeling toward them. A few extracts from the correspondence of Her Majesty's Chief Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs will suffice to show marked encouragement to the United States to persevere in its paper blockade, and unmistakable intimations that Her Majesty's Government would not contest its validity.

On the 21st of May, 1861, Earl RUSSELL pointed out to the United States Minister in London that "the blockade might no doubt be made effective, considering the small number of harbors on the Southern coast, even though the extent of 3,000 miles were comprehended in the area of that blockade."

On the 14th of January, 1862, Her Majesty's Minister in Washington, communicated to his Government that, in extenuation of the barbarous attempt to destroy the port of Charleston, by sinking a stone fleet in the harbor, Mr. SEWARD had explained "that the Government of the United States had just begun, with a navy very little prepared for so extensive an operation, undertaken to blockade upward of 3,000 miles of coast. The Secretary of the Navy had reported that he could stop up the 'large holes,' by means of his ships, but that he could not stop up the 'small ones.' It had been found necessary, therefore, to close some of the numerous small inlets by sinking vessels in them."

On the 6th May, 1862, so far from claiming the right of British subjects as neutrals to trade with us as belligerents, and to disregard the blockade on the ground of this explicit confession by our enemy of his inability to render it effective, Her Majesty's Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs claimed credit with the United States for friendly action in respecting it. His lordship stated that the United States Government, on the allegation of a rebellion pervading from nine to eleven States of the Union, have now, for more than twelve months, endeavored to maintain a blockade of three thousand miles of coast. This blockade, kept so imperfectly, but when enforced, enforced severely, has seriously injured the trade and manufactures of the United Kingdom. Thousands are now obliged to resort to the poor rates for subsistence owing to the blockade. Yet Her Majesty's Government have never sought to take advantage of the obvious imperfections of this blockade, in order to declare it ineffective. They have, to the loss and detriment of the British nation, scrupulously observed the duties of Great Britain toward a friendly State."

Again, on Sept. 22, 1862, the same noble Earl asserted that the United States were "very far indeed" from being in "a condition to ask other nations to assume that every part of the coast of the so-styled Confederate States is effectively blockaded."

When, in view of these facts, of the obligations of the British nation to adhere to the pledge made by their Government at Paris, in 1856, and renewed to the Confederacy in 1861; and of these repeated and explicit avowals of the imperfection, practically ineffectuary of the pretended blockade of our coast, I directed our Commissioner at London to call upon the British Government to redeem its promise and to withhold the moral aid and sanction from the flagrant violation of public law committed by our enemies, we were informed that Her Majesty's Government could not regard the blockade of the Southern ports as having been otherwise than "practically effective," in the February, 1862, sense, that "the manner in which it has since been enforced gives to neutral Governments no excuse for suggesting that the blockade has been ordinarily inefficient." We were further informed, when we insisted that by the terms of our agreement, no blockade was to be considered effective unless it existed really to prevent ingress to our coast, that the Commander of Her Majesty's ship directed against blockade-runners, and natural force, such as the occasional appearance of a man-of-war in the offing, or the like."

It was impossible that this mode of construing an agreement so as to make its terms mean almost the reverse of what they plainly conveyed, could be considered otherwise than as a notification of the refusal of the British Government to remain bound by its agreement, or longer to respect those articles of the declaration of Paris, which had been repeatedly denounced by British statesmen, and had been characterized by Earl Russell as "very imprudent" and "most unsatisfactory."

If any doubt remained of the motives by which the British Ministry have been actuated in their conduct, it would be completely dissipated by the gladsome avowals and congratulations contained in the published speech recently made by Her Majesty's Secretary for Foreign Affairs. In commenting on the remonstrances of this Government against the countenance given to an ineffective blockade, the following language is uttered: "It is said we have, contrary to the declarations of Paris, contrary to international law, permitted the blockade of thirty thousand miles of American coast. It is quite true we did so, and the presumable cause of complaint is quite true, that although the blockade is kept up by a sufficient number of ships, yet those ships were sent into the United States navy in a hurry, and are ill-fitted for the purpose, and did not keep up as completely and effectively as was required, an effective blockade."

This acquiescent confession of violation, both of agreement with us and of international law is founded on grounds, the validity of which we submit with confidence to the candid judgment of mankind.

Those grounds are thus stated: "Still looking at the law of nations it was a blockade, we, as a great belligerent power in former times, should have acknowledged. We, ourselves, had a blockade of upwards of 3,000 miles, and it did seem to me that we were bound in justice to the Federal States of America to acknowledge that blockade. But there was another reason which weighed with me. Our people were suffering severely for the want of that material which was the main staff of their industry, and it was a question of self-interest whether we should not break the blockade. But in my opinion the men of England would have disdained to take advantage of their own infamous act, for the sake of their own interest, if we had violated the law of nations and made a compromise in violation with those slaveholding States of America against the Federal States."

In the second of these reasons our rights are not involved; although it may be permitted to observe that the conduct of Governments has not heretofore to my knowledge been guided by the principle that it is inhumane to assert their rights whenever the infliction of those rights creates severe suffering among their people, and injuriously affects great interests. But the intimation that relations with those States would be disreputable, because they are slaveholding, would probably have been omitted if the official stenographer who has published it to the world had remembered that these States were, when colonies, made and maintained by the direct exercise of the power of Great Britain, whose dependencies they were, and whose interests in the Slave-trade were then supposed to be promoted by her colonists should be made slaveholding. But the other reason stated is of a very grave character. It asserts that a violation of the law of nations by Great Britain, in 1807, when that Government declared a paper blockade of 3,000 miles of coast, in violation then defended by her courts and jurists on the sole ground that her action was retaliatory, affords a justification for a similar outrage on neutral rights by the United States, in 1861, for which no justification can be suggested; and that Great Britain "is bound, in justice to the Federal States," to make amends for the war waged against her by the United States in resistance of her illegal blockade in 1807, by an acquiescence in the Federal illegal blockade of 1861. The most alarming feature in this statement is its admission of a just claim on the part of the United States to require of Great Britain, during this war, a disregard of the recognized principles of modern public law and of her own decisions, whenever any questionable conduct of Great Britain, "in former times," can be cited as a precedent. It is not inconsistent with respect and admiration for the great people whose Government have given us this warning, to suggest that their history, like that of mankind in general, offers exceptional instances of indefensible conduct "in former times;" and we may feel well assured that the morality of violating recent engagements through deference to the evil precedents of other times, will not be approved.

After defending, in the manner just stated, the course of the British Government on the subject of the blockade, Her Majesty's Foreign Secretary takes occasion to state, no doubt of the further purpose of the French Government to prevent our purchases of munitions in Great Britain, while supplying our enemies, with ships and other munitions of war, and states the intention to apply to Parliament for the furtherance of this design. He gives to the United States the assurance that he will do in their favor not only "everything that the law of nations requires, everything that the existing Foreign Enlistment Act requires," but that he will ask the extension of Parliament "to further measures that Her Majesty's Ministers may still add." This language is as unmistakably an official exposition of the policy adopted by the British Government in relation to our affairs, that the duty imposed on me by the Constitution, of giving you from time to time "information of the state of the Confederacy," would not have been performed if I had failed to place it distinctly before you.

I refer you for fuller details on this whole subject to the correspondence of the State Department, which accompanies this message. The facts which I have briefly narrated are, I trust, sufficient to enable you to appreciate the true nature of the neutrality professed in this war. It is not in my power to apprise you to what extent the Governments of France shares the views so unreservedly avowed by that of Great Britain, no published correspondence of the French Government on the subject having been received. No public protest nor remonstrance, however, has been made by Her Imperial Majesty against the prohibition to trade with us, imposed on French citizens by the proclamations of the United States, although I have reason to believe that an unsuccessful attempt was made on his part to secure the assent of the British Government to a course of action more consonant with the dictates of public law and with the friends of justice toward us.

The partiality of Her Majesty's Government in favor of our enemies has been further evinced in the marked difference of its conduct on the subject of the purchase of supplies by the two belligerents. This difference has been conspicuous since the very commencement of the war. As early as the 1st of May, 1861, the British Minister in Washington was informed by the Secretary of State of the United States that he had sent agents to England, and that others would go to France, to purchase arms, and this had been communicated to the British Foreign-office, which interposed no objection. Yet in October of the same year, Earl Russell entertained the complaint of the United States Minister in London, that the Confederate States were importing contraband of war from the Island of Nassau, directed inquiry into the matter and obtained a report from the authorities of the Island denying the allegations, which report was released to Mr. Adams, and received by him with satisfactory evidence to dissipate "the suspicions naturally thrown upon the authorities of Nassau by that unwarrantable act." In Feb. 1862, when the Confederate government purchased in Great Britain as a neutral country, (and this strict observance both of the law of nations and the municipal law of Great Britain,) vessels which were subsequently armed and commissioned as vessels of war, (for they had been far removed from English waters, the British Government, in violation of its own laws and in abeyance to the remonstrances of the United States, made an unofficial attempt to claim one vessel, and did actually close and detain another which touched at the Island of Nassau, on her way to a Confederate port, and subjected her to an unfounded prosecution. At the very time when cargoes of munitions of war were being openly shipped from British ports to New-York, to be used in warfare against us, Even now the public journals bring intelligence that the British Government has ordered the seizure, in a British port, of a vessel, upon the representation that she was sold to this Government, and that they may be speedily armed and equipped in our service, while British subjects are engaged in Ireland by issue of thousands to proceed to the United States for warfare against the Confederacy, in defiance both of the law of nations and of the express terms of the British statutes, and are transported in British ships, without an effort at enlistment, to the ports of the United States, there to be armed with rifles imported from Great Britain, and to be employed against our people in a war for conquest. No royal prerogative is invoked—no executive interference is interposed against this flagrant breach of municipal and international law on the part of our enemies, while certain neutral measures, prospective and questionable expedients devised for precluding the possibility of purchases by this Government, of vessels that are neither for belligerent purposes, unless hereafter armed and equipped, outside of the neutral jurisdiction of Great Britain.

For nearly three years this Government has exercised unquestioned jurisdiction over many millions of willing and united people. It has met and defeated vast armies of insurgents, who have in vain sought its overthrow. Supported by the confidence and affection of its citizens, the Confederacy has lashed its shores with strict fidelity to all the requirements of neutral duty, according to the principles of public law. Its legislative, executive and judicial departments, each in its orbit, have performed their appropriate functions with a regularity so unobtrusive as to escape the world's notice, and the whole energies of the people have been devoted to the organization of the social system which their rights and liberties demand. In the organization of their social system, which their rights and liberties demand, they have adopted the institutions of the Church of Christ, the Common Law of England, the Constitutional Law of the United States, and the maxims of Jefferson, Madison, and Washington. Without a precedent, without a parallel, in the history of the world, this Government, in the midst of a revolution, has established a system of jurisprudence which, in the opinion of its citizens, secures the blessings of liberty to them and their posterity. Yet, because this Government, in the exercise of its sovereignty, has ordained that its citizens shall not be the carriers of contraband of war for its enemies, and because its ports are closed against the entrance of armed vessels, which have been fitted out in violation of its laws, and which, if admitted, would be employed in the destruction of its citizens, it is charged with violating the law of nations, and its ports are said to be closed against the entrance of vessels of war, "even for the purpose of repairs, or for the purchase of provisions, or for shelter from the elements." Without a single word of remonstrance against the violation of our rights by the British Government in the case of the Alabama, which, after escaping from Great Britain, was permitted to receive a British crew and armament in the port of Terceira, and to return to England, where she was armed and equipped for the express purpose of destroying our commerce, we are asked to believe that our ports have been closed against the entrance of British vessels of war, and that our citizens have been prevented from the purchase of provisions and shelter from the elements, in the ports of Great Britain, while our enemies have been permitted to purchase vessels of war in her ports, and to receive them when armed and equipped, in violation of the neutral jurisdiction of Great Britain.

Without a single word of remonstrance against the violation of our rights by the British Government in the case of the Alabama, which, after escaping from Great Britain, was permitted to receive a British crew and armament in the port of Terceira, and to return to England, where she was armed and equipped for the express purpose of destroying our commerce, we are asked to believe that our ports have been closed against the entrance of British vessels of war, and that our citizens have been prevented from the purchase of provisions and shelter from the elements, in the ports of Great Britain, while our enemies have been permitted to purchase vessels of war in her ports, and to receive them when armed and equipped, in violation of the neutral jurisdiction of Great Britain.

In the second of these reasons our rights are not involved; although it may be permitted to observe that the conduct of Governments has not heretofore to my knowledge been guided by the principle that it is inhumane to assert their rights whenever the infliction of those rights creates severe suffering among their people, and injuriously affects great interests. But the intimation that relations with those States would be disreputable, because they are slaveholding, would probably have been omitted if the official stenographer who has published it to the world had remembered that these States were, when colonies, made and maintained by the direct exercise of the power of Great Britain, whose dependencies they were, and whose interests in the Slave-trade were then supposed to be promoted by her colonists should be made slaveholding. NEWS OF THE DAY.

THE REBELLION.

The monitor Weehawken sunk at her moorings off Morris Island, S. C., on Sunday last, during the prevalence of a gale. Thirty of her crew perished, among whom were four of her engineers. The Captain and remainder of the officers are safe. The other monitors rode out the storm.

We have received our correspondence from Morris Island and other points in the Department of the South by the steamship Fulton, which arrived at this port last evening. Of military operations there is nothing extraordinary to report. Gen. Gillmore is engaged in strengthening his batteries on Morris Island, and keeps up just sufficient fire upon the enemy's works to maintain his gunners in practice. The news of Grant's victory at Chattanooga inspired the troops with the utmost enthusiasm, and the event was duly recognized by the firing of a national salute—shotted guns being used whenever they could be brought to bear upon the city or the rebel fortifications. The terror in Charleston resulting from the bombardment is widespread. Business men and residents were retreating beyond the range of our guns. The sale at auction of South Carolina lands for the payment of direct taxes was held on the 14th inst., at Beaufort, and the Government was the chief purchaser.

The pursuit of the captured steamer Chesapeake is being prosecuted earnestly and with fair hope of success. A telegram from Halifax, dated yesterday, says that the steamer was at St. Mary's, short of coal, and if she remained there until to-day our gunboats would take her. Capt. Willetts and a portion of his crew passed through Portland yesterday, en route to Boston. Capt. Willetts furnishes a copy of the instructions under which the pirates acted in capturing the vessel.

On her trip from Port Royal to this port, the steamship Fulton fell in with and captured the schooner G. O. Bigelow, of Bermuda, with a cargo of salt, evidently intending to run the blockade of the North Carolina coast. An effort was made to tow her to this port, but she was too old to bear the strain of quick passage through the water. The master and crew of the schooner, however, were willing to try to get their shaky craft into port, and the Captain of the Fulton not thinking the prize of much value, let them again take possession, and away they went rejoicing.

FROM EUROPE.

Two days' later advices from Europe reach us by the steamship Canada, which arrived at Halifax, N. S., yesterday afternoon. The news is interesting. The rebel agents in London have recently purchased four steam vessels, which were formerly British men-of-war, and three of them are said to be refitting in the Thames, to be used as privateers. The fourth, which has been rechristened the Rappahannock, left Sheerness on the 26th ult. and arrived the same day at Calais, where she was taken in charge by the French Customs Officers, who detained her, however, a very short time. She is pierced for eight guns. The privateer Georgia was at Cherbourg repairing. The American residents in London duly observed the day appointed by President Lincoln for National Thanksgiving, and a grand banquet, presided over by Hon. Robert J. Walker, was given at St. James' Hall, where Minister Adams was among the speakers. The Court of Exchequer were to give judgment in the case of the Alexandra on the 7th inst. The formal reply of Russia to the proposition for a European Congress was received on the 26th, and it is denied that she demands that the programme of the Congress shall be drawn up. It is hinted that England's refusal to take part in the Congress will lead France to form a new and intimate alliance with some other nation. The French deficit, owing to the Mexican and Cochin-China wars, is estimated at £10,000,000, and it was said that a loan of 500,000,000 francs would be proposed. The agitation in the German States was unabated.

GENERAL NEWS.

In the Board of Aldermen, yesterday, a resolution was adopted asking the Street Commissioner to estimate and report the probable cost of replacing the piers on the North River recently destroyed by fire. The Comptroller reported that of the $8,126,350 07 appropriated for 1863, $6,738,940 92 had been expended on the 1st inst.—leaving a balance of $1,395,009 15 unexpended at that date. The Board concurred in adopting the resolution to pay Mr. Stetson, of the Astor, for the Russian banquet, and also for entertainments to regiments that returned from the seat of war last Summer. The amounts of the several bills were fully stated in yesterday's Times. The Board adjourned to 1 P. M. to-day.

In the Board of Councilmen yesterday, a resolution was presented and laid over, requesting the Pilot Commissioners to have the hulks of the burnt vessels in the slips between Piers Nos. 51 and 54, on the North River—the location of the recent great fire—removed forthwith. Otherwise the proceedings were without general interest. The Board adjourned till noon to-day.

The steamship Ariel, which arrived at this port yesterday, from Aspinwall, brings the following specie list:

Total			$203,184

FROM ASPINWALL.

In addition to the fleet already sent hence in search of the Chesapeake, orders were received at the Navy-yard, yesterday, for the immediate dispatch of the Dacon and the Augusta. The former left early in the morning, the latter will leave early to-day. It is said the Kensington and Paterhoff will sail to-morrow. The Schago left last night.

The "skating season" it was hoped, had commenced yesterday. "Ball up" was the word from Central Park, and quite a number hastened there to enjoy the sport. The ice was very fine. The Fifth-avenue Park was opened to the subscribers, and an afternoon of enjoyment was also had. Gloves were worn short of ice. In the afternoon the weather greatly moderated, and quite a snow-storm prevailed until late at night, when it turned into a pleasantly chilly drizzle. The hopes yesterday of "glorious sport" will more than likely end this morning a disappointment.

Capt. Thorne and Officer Dowlin, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct, yesterday arrested William S. Clinton, who is charged with being extensively engaged in counterfeiting the fifty cent United States postal currency. On his person were found $220 of the counterfeits, admirably executed. Clinton was handed over to the United States Marshal. This is a very important arrest. The prisoner had offered to sell the currency to Mr. Robert F. Herwin for 40 cents on the dollar. Mr. Herwin pretended he would trade, appointed a time and place, and then sent word to Capt. Thorne.

The City Canvassers, owing to the illness of Alderman Walsh, did nothing yesterday but meet and adjourn to 11 o'clock this morning, when Alderman Walsh, it is believed, will be able to be present and attend to the canvassing of the returns from the Sixth Ward, which are the only returns uncanvassed.

Nearly $400,000 were subscribed to the County Volunteer Loan yesterday, and the Supervisors' Committee are now having great success in getting recruits.

The price of Gold varied from 151½ to 150¾ yesterday. Exchange on London 165 ⅌ cent. Money 7 ⅌ cent. The Share market ¼@1 ⅌ cent. higher than on Thursday.

Breadstuffs were more active yesterday at advanced rates. Provisions, Sugars, Whisky, Hay, Hops, Fish, Fruit, Tallow, Wool, Petroleum and Foreign Liquors were in fair request. Tobacco was actively sought after at rising prices. Cotton was heavy and drooping. Trade in Dry Goods was restricted. Freights were brisker, and rates, in some instances, firmer.

The Message of Jeff. Davis.

Jefferson Davis has sent a very important message to the Confederate Congress, which began its sessions in Richmond on Monday last. It is quite as interesting here as it will be there, and we give it, therefore, at length in another part of this morning's Times. It can scarcely be called a cheerful document, but it certainly shows, to a very high degree, the courage of desperation. Mr. Davis does everything in his power to put a bold face on the prospects of the rebellion; but we doubt whether he will succeed in inspiring the great mass of his own people with any great amount of hope in its fortunes.

The Message acknowledges that disaster has overtaken the Confederate arms, and that they have not succeeded in expelling the "invader" from their soil. In two or three instances, their troops have behaved very badly, and have given way before the forces of the United States, with a degree of alacrity which he declares to be wholly unaccountable. He alludes also to the very frequent instances of desertion which have recently occurred, and ascribes them in part to injudicious legislation, which affects unfavorably the minds of the men. We did not expect him to say—what is very clearly the truth—that their minds have been still more seriously affected by the waning fortunes of the bad cause for which they are fighting. It is eminently true in war that "nothing is so successful as success;" and failure is quite certain to perpetuate itself by destroying the courage and confidence which are essential to victory. There is a courage in despair which often prompts to heroic deeds; but the great mass of the Southern people—those who fill the ranks of the rebel army—cannot feel this motive, because their personal fortunes are not to be injuriously affected by the failure of the rebellion. Davis and the leaders of the conspiracy have everything at stake in the contest. Failure is for them ruin, political and social, utter and irretrievable; the instinct of self-preservation, therefore, prompts them to fight to the last. The mass of the people cannot share this feeling, because failure for them has no such terror. After what they have endured, it becomes rather the precursor of hope.

A large part of the Message is devoted to proving that, in spite of their promises and the early action of their Governments, the present attitude of France and Great Britain toward the Confederacy is one of distinct and unmistakable hostility. We are glad to acknowledge the ability with which this argument is urged, and to confess that it seems to us quite conclusive. We trust nothing will occur to impair its force. Mr. Davis is very much puzzled as to measures of retaliation, but thinks that something may be done in this way by withdrawing the assent of the Confederacy to the Paris doctrine that "neutral ships cover enemy's goods except contraband of war." We trust that the rebel Congress will act promptly on this suggestion.

The financial condition of the Confederacy is quite as dismal and unpromising as its foreign relations. An enormous debt has been incurred, and "the popular aversion to taxation" has defeated every attempt to provide for its payment. Two-thirds of all the property of the South, that which consists of lands and slaves, is virtually exempt from taxation, and the other third does not respond. The currency of the country has reached six hundred millions, or three times what it required for its business, and the most serious and damaging results are already experienced from this circumstance. The Message advises a compulsory reduction of the currency, by compelling its exchange for Confederate bonds. Various suggestions are made as to means for increasing the army, but none of them are likely to be either acceptable or effective.

The rebel President revels and luxuriates in denunciations of the policy pursued by the Government of the United States. He accuses us of the most infamous barbarities in our treatment of rebel prisoners in our hands—charges us with starving and freezing them to death—throws on us the entire responsibility for stopping exchanges, and heaps up reproachful epithets and savage accusations with a veluble and exultant zeal which quite makes amends for the dolorous and despending tenor of the previous portions of this ponderous document. Mr. Davis evidently counts largely on this as a stimulant to the waning courage of the rebels. We do not blame him for resorting to it, nor do we at all fear its effect. The day has passed when words were omnipotent, even at the South. Facts, which his rhetoric cannot explain away, are rapidly telling on the Southern mind. All his railing cannot avert the inevitable and ever-hastening catastrophe.

Gen. Meade's Late Campaign.

We give this morning a letter from a correspondent in the Army of the Potomac, which brings to light the authentic facts in the late abortive campaign of Gen. Meade. The writer's opportunities for obtaining information are of a character not inferior to the highest official authorities, and his statements may be implicitly relied upon. The public hopes and expectations on the opening of the campaign had been wrought up to a very high degree, and the popular disappointment at its termination was correspondingly great. We ourselves took occasion to give a very decided expression to the feeling which was entertained by every patriot and soldier. The preposterous statement that was put forth that the whole campaign, with all its gigantic preparations and manœuvres, was intended as but a diversion in favor of Gen. Burnside in East Tennessee, could be credited by no intelligent man. Our correspondent shows that Gen. Meade had a purpose altogether different from this. His purpose was precisely what the public understood it to be when it was announced that the Army of the Potomac had crossed the Rapidan and taken up its line of march southward. It was to fight Lee and destroy his army, as Grant had fought Bragg and destroyed that army.

His purpose and his campaign were baulked. How, why and by whom? The public has never known. Our army was strong in numbers, superb in morale, and eager for the fray; the plan of the campaign was superexcellent, and its projector was confessedly competent to execute it. It was baulked almost in its inception by the failure of a single officer to "come to time." On such failures or accidents hangs often the fortune of battles, of campaigns—hangs frequently the fate of nations—though it is certain that our destiny or final success in this war can depend upon neither accident nor temporary failure. The recent arrest, by order of the military authorities, of Gen. French, commander of the Third army corps, will doubtless be the means of putting the whole matter before the public and upon the page of history. We would not hastily condemn this or any other loyal officer—nor would we condemn him at all. In the course of the war, Gen. French has shown himself an accomplished commander, a fearless fighting leader. But still, for the credit of Gen. Meade, and the honor of our indomitable, death-defying Army of the Potomac, it is proper that the causes and circumstances of the late abortive campaign should be known to the country.

The Schleswig-Holstein Question.

It is unfortunate that the first views of European questions are gained in America through the English press. We have all had full opportunity of testing the untrustworthiness and the malignant falsehood of the leading English journals with regard to American questions. Why should we expect greater accuracy or honesty with respect to continental? It is a pleasing habit of the London journalists to speak of the Schleswig-Holstein question as a kind of intellectual "muddle"—a purely technical dispute—under cover of which the German Powers are trying to despoil a weak state of her principal provinces. The facts are quite otherwise, and, as the question may at any moment inaugurate a European war, they ought to be understood by all intelligent men.

The case is simply this: By innumerable laws and compacts, dating back at least five centuries, the Duchies of Schleswig and Holstein are independent sovereign States, in a "personal union" with Denmark, as Hungary was with Austria, but under their own Constitution, and separate from Denmark. The two form one Power, under the same Prince (hitherto) as Denmark. One of them (Holstein) is also a member of the German Confederacy. An order of succession is also established in the most solemn manner since 1650, giving the government of the Duchies to the next male heir of the reigning Duke. With the recent death of King Frederick, the last male of the royal house of Oldenburg had passed away, and the Duchies would now, according to their ancient laws and their own desires, become separated from their "personal union" with Denmark, as Hanover, in 1837, was separated from Great Britain. The legitimate heir and claimant, who is about to sustain his claims by force, is the Prince of Augustenburg; and were the divisions of Europe to be determined solely by law or by the wishes of the people, the Kingdom of Denmark would this year virtually come to its end.

But there are other parties who have an interest in this little Kingdom. Her importance in the eyes of Europe is, that she holds the keys of the Baltic. Whatever Continental State possesses her can become a formidable naval Power. Russia covets those harbors which would give her a naval station, and open a way for her fleets, even in Winter, to the Atlantic. Prussia and the German Confederacy are struggling continually toward the sea, and Kiel would make them naval Powers. France and England are, of course, opposed to these aspirations, and are, therefore, in favor of the undivided Kingdom of Denmark, as a bulwark at the entrance of the Baltic to its more powerful neighbors.

Eleven years ago all these leading European Powers met in one of these arbitrary Congresses, which dispose of peoples as if they were so many puppets in the hands of players. In this London Convention of 1852, the ancient Constitution of the Duchies and the unquenchable desires of the people for independence were calmly trampled under foot. The two provinces were separated from one another, and with Denmark and Lauenburg were united—each of the four separately—under one King and one Parliament. The King who was to be thus summarily placed over the Duchies, was Prince Christian, of Glucksburg, father of the present Princess of Wales, whose male heirs were to govern forever the duchies. The Emperor of Russia at the same time resigned all his claims to the Duchies in favor of the Prince of Glucksburg. This Convention determined the present condition of Denmark, and may force France and England into an armed assistance of the Danish King against the Duchies and against Germany.

The fatal objection to it—and one which no English Constitutionalist ought for a moment to overlook—is that the people of the Duchies and their Legislature were not consulted at all in this disposition of their Government and their future. If they now oppose any such union with Denmark, to enforce it would be entirely contrary to the avowed policy of England and to the principles which France has maintained in Italy with so much expense and bloodshed. The Duchies have been oppressed and wronged by the Kingdom of Denmark in ways without number. It is well known, for instance, that there is not in any town or village of Schleswig at this time any voter of influence who has not been prosecuted for voting contrary to Danish orders. Every office is filled with Danes; even patriotic clergymen and schoolmasters are replaced by supple and submissive Danish incumbents, who will train the people to obey implicitly the Danish authority. The people of both Schleswig and Holstein—either speaking German or of German descent—feel as American emigrants used to feel in New-Mexico or California—that they should belong to the great nationality which was united with them in blood. They entertain no pride or affection for petty Denmark. They belong to the German "Fatherland." Holstein is already a member of the German Confederacy. Both Duchies desire to be.

Such aspirations of nationality are not to be sneered at—least of all by Americans, who know the power and the benefit of a vast united people. The German Confederacy never gave their consent to the pacts of 1852, and they ought not now to suffer the oppression of one of their own States by a foreign Power, acting under these Conventions.

A united Germany, stretching from Russia to the keys of the Baltic, with the means and the capacity of forming a naval Power, is a far better guarantee for the peace and the welfare of Europe, than a Germany split up and disunited, and a petty kingdom on its borders, at once the creation and the tool of arbitrary and unconstitutional diplomacy.

Defining their Positions.—The Democratic party in Congress does not make a very harmonious beginning. They failed to unite on any candidate for Speaker, and broke up into half a dozen squads, the largest numbering 52, (forty less than were necessary to a choice,) and the smallest consisting of Mr. Benjamin Wood. This was a sad falling off from the sanguine expectations in which they indulged at one time of being able to elect a Speaker of their own—and does not hold forth any strong promise of union and harmony in their own ranks during the session.

In the election of Chaplain on Thursday, the Democracy did a little better. They were able to concentrate their vote a little more than in the canvass for Speaker. They gave Bishop Hopkins, of Vermont, 55 votes,—three more than they were able to muster for Mr. Cox. The only ground on which the Bishop was made a candidate at all, was the fact that he wrote a book to prove that Slavery is a divine institution. But for this, he would never have received a vote, or been mentioned in connection with a Congressional chaplaincy. It seems pretty clear, therefore, that this principle comes nearer uniting the Democratic party than any other. More of the Democratic members of Congress agree in regard to the absolute and divine right of Slavery, than can be found to agree on any other point,—and the reorganization of the party, if it takes place at all, is likely to rest upon that principle as its basis.

It is not difficult to predict the result. The Democratic party taking this ground,—becoming infinitely more devoted to Slavery than to the country,—willing to sacrifice the country in order to save Slavery,—will become gradually but certainly the weakest and most contemptible political party this country has ever known. It is following steadily in the footsteps of the Tories after the Revolution, and of the Federalists after the last war with Great Britain; and it is quite certain, unless it speedily changes its course, to share their fate.

An Abolition Debate Declined.—It will be seen by a correspondence which we publish elsewhere, that the public has escaped the annoyance of a verbal debate on the favorite crotchets of the ultra Abolitionists. Rev. Mr. Cheever invited Mr. Beecher to discuss with him a variety of propositions on the subject of Slavery,—proposing on his own part to prove that under the Constitution it was the highest duty of the United States Government to interfere against Slavery in the States. Mr. Beecher very sensibly and properly declines any such discussion. He reminds Mr. Cheever that he edits a newspaper, and can urge his own views at pleasure in its columns,—and that as he himself edits another, he can comment on those views whenever he thinks it worth while. No good could possibly result from such a debate as Dr. Cheever proposed. The celebrity of the disputants would draw a large audience, and their intellectual ability would, doubtless, interest their hearers. But practically nothing would be settled and no real good accomplished. These questions are not to be decided, when we come to the practical readjustment of our political affairs, by the niceties of metaphysical debate. They will be taken up by the common sense of the people at large, and such disposition will be made of them as the substantial welfare of the country may require. Times of civil commotion and of revolution are always very inviting for extremists and fanatics of every sort—but there never was a time when they were likely to do more hurt, or less good, than now.

REPORT OF MAJ.-GEN. HALLECK.

A Review of the Military Operations of the Past Year.

SYNOPSIS OF THE REPORT.

Gen. Halleck opens his very lengthy report by taking up the Army of the Potomac at the time Gen. McClellan was relieved by Gen. Burnside, at Warrenton, Va., on the 7th of November, 1862. Gen. Halleck urged Gen. Burnside to continue his pursuit of Lee toward Richmond, but Gen. Burnside declined, desiring to move to Falmouth, but finally consented to cross the Rappahannock by the upper fords and occupy Fredericksburgh. Gen. Burnside's final march to, and occupation of Falmouth, was never authorized or approved by the authorities in Washington. The plan which the President assented to was to cross the river by the upper fords and occupy the town. This Gen. Burnside did not do. Gen. Burnside asked permission to do so when he arrived at Falmouth, the river being fordable, but it was refused. In the meantime Lee got there and intrenched. The delay of the pontoons, which should have been at Falmouth when Gen. Burnside arrived there, is explained by the fact that instead of being in Washington, where they were supposed to be, they were at Berlin and Harper's Ferry, and had not been moved, because the officers in charge did not receive Gen. Burnside's order to move them to Washington. The battle of Fredericksburgh occurred Dec. 13. Through an alleged misinterpretation of orders, Gen. Franklin's attack on the left was only a reconnoissance in force, and the attack of Sumner and Hooker on the right was unsupported. We were repulsed with a loss of 1,120 killed, 9,105 wounded, and 2,076 missing. Gen. Burnside has never made any official report of these operations. He says:

"The fact that I decided to move from Warrenton to this line, rather against the opinion of the President, the Secretary of War and yourself, and that you have left the whole movement in my hands, without giving me orders, makes me the more responsible."

On the 25th of January Gen. Hooker relieved Gen. Burnside. Gen. Halleck merely refers in a sentence to the campaign of Gen. Hooker, says he has no official data of it, and then remarks:

"It is also proper to remark in this place that from the time he was placed in command of the Army of the Potomac till he reached Fairfax Station, on the 16th of June, a few days before he was relieved from the command, Gen. Hooker reported directly to the President, and received instructions directly from him. I received no official information of his plans, or of their execution."

Early in June Lee moved up the Rappahannock into the Shenandoah Valley, Hooker followed on an interior line. Neither army could obtain much information of the other because of the intervening mountains. Winchester and Martinsburgh were mere outposts, and orders were given on the 11th of June to withdraw the garrison, to Harper's Ferry; but these orders were not obeyed; and on the 13th Winchester was attacked and captured. On June 26, at Frederick, Md., Gen. Hooker, at his own request, was relieved from the command of the Army of the Potomac.

"Our force at Harper's Ferry at this time was supposed to be about 11,000. It was incorrectly represented to Gen. Meade to be destitute of provisions, and that he must immediately supply it or order the abandonment of the place. Accordingly, a few hours after he assumed the command, he assented to an order drawn up by an officer of Gen. Hooker's Staff, directing Gen. French to send 7,000 men of the garrison to Frederick, and with the remainder—estimated at 4,000—to remove and escort the public property to Washington. This order, based on erroneous representations, was not known in Washington till too late to be countermanded. It, however, was not entirely executed when Gen. Meade very judiciously directed the reoccupation of that important point."

Gen. Halleck then describes the battle of Gettysburgh; ascribes an error to Gen. Sickles, which came near being fatal to us on the second day of the fight. But the rebels were finally defeated, and "to Gen. Meade belongs the honor of a well-earned victory in one of the greatest and best fought battles of the war. The retreat of Lee and the pursuit by Meade are described, closing with this:

"In the meantime Gen. French had reoccupied Harper's Ferry, destroyed the enemy's pontoon train at Williamsport and Falling Waters, and captured its guards. Halting a day at Middletown, Gen. Meade crossed the South Mountain, and on the 12th found the enemy occupying a strong position on the heights of Marsh Run, in front of Williamsport. Instead of attacking Lee in this position, with the swollen waters of the Potomac in his rear, without any means of crossing his artillery, and when a defeat must have caused the surrender of his entire army, he was allowed time to construct a pontoon bridge with lumber collected from canal boats, and the ruins of wooden houses, and on the morning of the 14th his army had crossed to the south side of the river. His rear guard, however was attacked by our cavalry, and suffered considerable loss. Thus ended the rebel campaign north of the Potomac, from which important political and military results had been expected. Our own loss in this short campaign had been very severe, viz.: 2,834 killed, 13,709 wounded, and 6,643 missing—in all, 23,185. We captured 3 guns, 41 standards, 13,621 prisoners, 28,176 small arms."

Gen. Halleck then briefly recounts the minor operations of the Army of the Potomac up to the battle of Rappahannock Station, but gives no new facts.

The operations in Western Virginia have been mainly of a defensive character, in repelling raids and breaking up guerrilla bands.

The force in the Department of North Carolina during the past year has been too small for any important operations against the enemy, and has acted mostly on the defensive. But Hill's operations against Foster in North Carolina, as well as Longstreet's against Peck in Virginia, were entirely unsuccessful.

Gen. Gillmore's operations before Charleston are recited at some length, with this comment:

"Gen. Gillmore's operations have been characterized by great professional skill and boldness. He has overcome difficulties almost unknown in modern sieges. Indeed, his operations on Morris Island constitute almost a new era in the science of engineering and gunnery. Since the capture of Forts Wagner and Gregg he has enlarged these works, and established powerful batteries which effectually command Fort Sumter, and can render efficient aid to any naval attack upon Charleston. They also control the entrance to the harbor."

In the Department of the Gulf operations have been generally successful. The preliminary movements to the siege of Port Hudson are given at length. On the 8th of July the place unconditionally surrendered. We captured 6,233 prisoners, 51 pieces of artillery, two steamers, 4,500 pounds of cannon-powder, 5,000 small arms, 150,000 rounds of ammunition, &c. Our loss from the 3d to the 30th of May, including the assault of the 27th, as reported, was about 1,000.

The Department of the Tennessee is next reviewed. The object of Gen. Grant's campaign was the opening of the Mississippi, in conjunction with the army of Gen. Banks. Gen. Sherman's first attack upon Vicksburgh failed because the place was more strongly fortified than had been supposed. The troops were then withdrawn, and the capture of Arkansas Post accomplished on the 11th of January. We captured at the latter place 5,000 prisoners, 17 pieces of cannon, 3,000 small arms, 60,000 rounds of ammunition and 563 animals.

Gen. Grant then assumed immediate command of the army on the Mississippi, which was largely reinforced. Grant soon became satisfied that the north line of Vicksburgh was too strong to be successfully attacked; the canal soon proved a failure; and Gen. Grant directed his attention to other means of turning the enemy's flank. With the assistance of Porter and Farragut he ran the batteries at Vicksburgh, and his army crossed the river seventy miles below, and began the important movement upon the rear of Vicksburgh, which is described in detail.

The movement was followed by the battles of Raymond, May 12; of Jackson, May 14; of Champion's Hill, May 16; and Big Black River Bridge, May 17—in all of which our troops were victorious. In this campaign Gen. Grant captured 27,000 prisoners. His total loss in the whole movement was 1,243 killed, 7,095 wounded, and 537 missing. Gen. Halleck remarks:

"No more brilliant exploit can be found in military history. It has been alleged, and the allegation has been widely circulated by the press, that Gen. Grant, in the conduct of his campaign, positively disobeyed the instructions of his superiors. It is hardly necessary to remark that Gen. Grant never disobeyed an order or instruction, but always carried out to the full of his ability every wish or suggestion made to him by the Government. Moreover, he has never complained that the Government did not furnish him all the means and assistance in its power, to facilitate the execution of any plan he saw fit to adopt."

Then followed a period of rest to the greater portion of the army: Sherman's corps, however, captured Jackson, on the 16th of July, when Gen. Sherman returned to Vicksburgh to recuperate.

Operations in the Department of Missouri are not reviewed at much length, all the battles and skirmishes being recounted, but no new facts are presented. In Arkansas, Gen. Steele drove the enemy south of the Arkansas River, and finally beyond the Red River. A large portion of the military of this department has been engaged in suppressing the raids of guerrillas, and Gen. Halleck urges severe measures against these outlaws.

Gen. Pope's operations against the Indians in the Northwest have been quite successful. Nearly all the hostile tribes have been scattered and driven beyond the Missouri into British territory.

The Department of the Pacific has been exempt from civil war. The only fighting has been with a few hostile tribes of Indians. Neither had anything also been done in New-Mexico during the year.

The Department of the Ohio comprises the operations of Gen. Burnside and his predecessors, and recounts the several raids in East Tennessee, by Generals Carter, Shackelford, and Saunders, the capture of Jonn Morgan and his command, and, finally, the important operations in East Tennessee, up to the commencement of the siege of Knoxville. These facts are only a repetition of the history of that portion of the war, which we put down in the minds of the public. Gen. Burnside was ordered to cooperate with Gen. Rosecrans after his occupation of Knoxville and Loudon, Gen. Burnside was ordered to move down by the north bank of the river. "But although repeatedly urged to effect this junction with the Army of the Cumberland, Gen. Burnside retained most of his forces in the upper valley, which was still threatened by a small rebel force under Gen. Jones." The report does not come down to the siege of Knoxville.

Gen. Rosecrans' operations are succinctly reviewed from the time of his taking command up to his removal, including the battle of Stone River at length. "In that battle we lost 1,533 killed, 7,245 wounded and 3,686 missing, and 22 pieces of artillery. We took six pieces of artillery. Upon subsequent operations Gen. Halleck remarks:

"While Gen. Grant was operating before Vicksburgh, information deemed reliable was received from captured rebel correspondence that large detachments were being drawn from Bragg's army to reinforce Johnson in Mississippi. Reinforcements were sent to Grant from other quarters in the West, but Gen. Rosecrans' army was left intact, in order that he might take advantage of Bragg's diminished numbers, and drive him back into Georgia, and thus secure loyal East Tennessee from the hands of the rebels, an object which the Government has kept constantly in view from the beginning of the war. I therefore urged Gen. Rosecrans to take advantage of this opportunity to carry out his long projected movement, informing him that Gen. Burnside would cooperate with his force, moving from Kentucky to East Tennessee. For various reasons he preferred to postpone his movement until the termination of the siege of Vicksburgh."

Gen. Halleck throw the responsibility of overlong not moving upon Gen. Rosecrans. In our report since that followed, Rosecrans finally advanced against Bragg, who retreated, but the former's movements were rapid and very successful, the enemy being forced out of his strongly fortified positions one after the other. Gen. Halleck then goes into a full history of Gen. Rosecrans' operations in Alabama, Tennessee and Georgia, which culminated in his defeat at Chickamauga. All the correspondence on the subject is given. The movement appears to have been conceived by Gen. Rosecrans, and sanctioned by Gen. Halleck. Gen. Burnside was certainly ordered to reinforce Rosecrans, as late as Sept. 14, and Hurlbut, at Memphis, was put under like orders. This part of Gen. Halleck's report endeavors to show, at length, the efforts made for the reinforcement of Gen. Rosecrans before the battle of Chickamauga. Gen. Grant, Pope and Sherman were called on for their some troops, but Grant, who had them to spare, was in New-Orleans, and could not be reached. Gen. Halleck says it was proposed to put Gen. Grant in chief command of the three armies early in the middle of September, but his absence and illness at New-Orleans prevented it.

Then came the battle of Chickamauga, concerning which Gen. Halleck says it was very difficult to ascertain from which direction Bragg had been reinforced. Our loss in that battle was 16,000 in killed, wounded and missing, and 36 pieces of artillery. We captured 2,000 prisoners. The report of military operations comes down to the capture of Lookout Valley, by Gen. Hooker's movement from Bridgeport, on the 28th of October, the credit of which is ascribed to Gen. Grant.

The balance of the report is confined to general remarks and recommendations, one of which is to establish the grades of General and Lieutenant-General in the army, with the same pay and emoluments as Major-General.

NEWS FROM WASHINGTON.

OUR SPECIAL WASHINGTON DISPATCHES.

IMPORTANT CONCERNING THE ARMY OF THE POTOMAC.

The Army of the Potomac will be immediately reorganized and made larger and better in every way than it has been at any former period. Its chief command will probably be tendered to either Hooker or Thomas. It is believed that Thomas would prefer remaining where he is. Hooker's reputation, since the battle of Lookout Mountain, stands higher than ever. He is considered here, by some folks, as the next commander of the Army of the Potomac. The present corps commanders, with one exception, will be relieved.

THE GOVERNMENT OF GEN. BUTLER'S DEPARTMENT.

Gen. Butler has issued an order requiring Judges, Justices, Sheriffs, Attorneys, Notaries, and all officers of the law, and all persons residing in his department who therein exercise any office, hold any place of trust or calling whatever which calls for the doing of any legal act whatever, or for the doing of any act judicial or administrative which shall or may affect any other person than the actor, and any person who shall desire to carry on any business save manual labor for his own support, or to be heard in any Court, or to have his rights of property in any way protected, to take and subscribe the following oath and parole:

We do solemnly swear that we will bear true faith and allegiance to the United States of America, and support the Constitution thereof against all enemies and opposers, whether States or individuals, and we give our solemn parole of honor, to be enforced according to military law, that we will hold no correspondence with or afford any aid or comfort to any enemies of the United States save as an act of humanity to administer to the necessities of individuals who are in sickness or distress, and we solemnly declare that this oath and parole are taken and given freely and willingly, without any mental reservation whatever, and with full intention to keep the same.

All acts, doings, deeds, instruments, records, or certificates, certified or attested by, and transactions done by any of the persons above described, from and after the 15th day of December, inst., who shall not have taken and subscribed such oath, are void and of no effect.

STORMY TIMES LOOKED FOR IN THE REBEL CONGRESS.

Private advices received here to-day from Richmond say that the present session of the Confederate Congress will be a stormy one. The question of reconstruction will be fearlessly presented to the Southern people by the conservative members from North Carolina. A great many members elected on the "last ditch" platform are said to be secretly in favor of the policy advocated by the North Carolina conservatives. Joint resolutions will soon be introduced taking strong grounds in favor of reconstruction.

CHAIRMAN OF THE HOUSE MILITARY COMMITTEE.

Gen. Garfield will probably be Chairman of the House Military Committee.

An Abolition Debate Declined.

REV. GEORGE B. CHEEVER TO REV. HENRY WARD BEECHER.

New-York, Dec. 7, 1863.

Rev. Henry Ward Beecher—My Dear Sir: In your addresses to the people of England you have spoken of Slavery in this country, as being a constitutional institution, and of our Government and nation as under a binding compact not to interfere against it. Will you allow me to propose a public discussion or debate on these questions?

First—Is Slavery a constitutional institution?

Second—Is there any guarantee of Slavery in the Constitution, or any pledge or agreement not to interfere against it?

Third—Does not the Constitution forbid Slavery, and bind the Government to protect every citizen from being made a slave?

Fourth—Is there any possibility under our Constitution of the existence of such State sovereignty as constitutes a right to enslave?

These questions enter so deeply into the consideration of a reconstruction of the Union, that a public discussion of them could not fail to be interesting and instructive. I invite you to serve your proposition that Slavery is a constitutional institution, and I will prove that it is not. I invite you to point out the compact binding the nation not to interfere against it, and I will show that there is no such compact.

I invite you to prove that the Government was ever bound not to interfere against Slavery, and I will prove that such interference was and is its first obligation, both by the law of Christianity and the Constitution. I propose that this discussion or debate take place in the Cooper Institute, and if you have no objection, (the time being agreed upon,) that you take the first evening and I the second, or you the first hour and I the second, then alternating till the debate is ended. I will assume the responsibility of the hall, and if admission to the debate be constituted by a fee, I propose that the avails be given in aid of the freedmen and colored soldiers.

I am most respectfully and truly yours,

GEORGE B. CHEEVER.

MR. BEECHER'S REPLY.

New-York, Dec. 8, 1863.

My Dear Sir: The topics which you ask me to discuss with you in public debate would require not a little adjustment before I should accept them as a proper foundation for discussion.

You are editorially connected with one respectable newspaper and I with another. It will give me great pleasure to read whatever you may have to suggest in your paper on these important subjects, and if at any time I think the cause which we both are sincerely striving to serve would be helped by such a course, I will comment on your views in the Independent. But the debate I respectfully decline, as consuming too much time and strength for any good that may reasonably be expected to flow from it. I am, my dear Sir, very truly yours,

H. W. BEECHER.

Sweet Home Salvation.—An article of much interest to mankind. If not, why is it only to be of great interest to gentlemen, we will tend to lessen their labor for labor down. We have reference to the indispensable necessaries for making a clean out of the dust and dirt of the streets, and which to be convenient that the same can be elevated uniformly till extend, at a moment's notice, when a sudden shower, or change to a less cleanly walk, renders it necessary. We understand that the public are indebted to Mme. Demorest, the renowned modiste, for this simple yet important invention.—Home Journal. Price 25 cents.

Preliminary to the publication of the subjoined certificates relating to

we present a summary of facts already advertised, viz: that CRIMEAN BITTERS were first used in a modified form in FRENCH ARMY HOSPITALS during the late Crimean war; (hence the name;) that their efficiency as a REMEDIAL AGENT, was then fully established. But to guard against any possibility of subjecting the American public to imposition or hazarding our own reputation, we submitted the compound for examination and recombination to two of our most distinguished analytical Chemists, viz.: Professor JAMES R. CHILTON and JULIUS G. POHLE, whose joint certificate, already published, speaks for itself. That they have been administered to invalid soldiers by the head Surgeon of the U. S. Hospital at Newark, N. J., for months, with the most gratifying success—the unanimous report of himself and seven Ward Physicians. That during this period they were placed for trial in families of the highest respectability and wealth in New-York, Brooklyn and other adjacent cities, with results justifying our most sanguine expectations of their remarkable

TONIC AND RESTORATIVE.

UNITED STATES GENERAL HOSPITAL,

NEWARK, N. J., March 21, 1863.

Messrs. W. Chilton & Co.:

You have asked me what good effects I experienced from using "Romaine's Crimean Bitters," which you so kindly placed at my disposal, after a severe attack of Typhoid Fever. I will say that I experienced very much benefit from its use, and was enabled to resume my duties in a much shorter time than I expected, after so severe an illness. By its use my Digestive Organs resumed their functions quickly. An article prepared so carefully as it is, and from so valuable medicines, cannot, in my opinion, fail to do good when properly used.

FEVER AND AGUE.

U. S. GENERAL HOSPITAL,

NEWARK, N. J., March 20, 1863.

Messrs. W. Chilton & Co.:

In compliance with your request, it affords me pleasure to state to you that the use of your compound, called "Crimean Bitters," cured several soldiers under my charge, of obstinate intermittent fever, which had defied, for weeks, the usual remedy of quinine, and I use it in similar cases.

ADAPTED TO A SOUTHERN CLIMATE.

OFFICE OF POST SURGEON,

BEAUFORT, S. C., Sept. 16, 1863.

Messrs. W. Chilton & Co.:

The cases of "Crimean Bitters" have safely arrived, and the article has given unbounded satisfaction. I gave a case of it to Dr. Weris, the Medical Director, who liked it at once, and it was indorsed by Surg.-Gen. Hammond, who arrived the following day, who was aware of its merited success in the U. S. Hospital at Newark, N. J., and elsewhere.

It is unanimously declared by all the Surgeons here that it is just the thing for this climate. Could you not with advantage establish an agency at this place? Dr. Hayden, the Post Surgeon, wants a case sent to him by the next Steamer, and I also want another.

MALARIOUS DISTRICTS.

Extract from another letter from a United States Surgeon, dated Beaufort, S. C., Oct. 18, 1863.

Messrs Chilton & Co.:

By the last steamer, per request of Assistant-Surgeon  U. S. A., I received a case of Crimean Bitters. In this MALARIOUS CLIMATE I find them so useful that I beg you to send me another case by the next steamer. Col. A. C. H, Medical Inspector, will recommend the Bitters to the Medical Department. I have already done so.

BOWEL REGULATOR.

BEAUFORT, S. C., Nov. 18, 1863.

Messrs. W. Chilton & Co.:

Please forward to me one case of Crimean Bitters. The article is, beyond comparison, the most medicinal of any Bitters I have ever used. They regulate the bowels perfectly, and strengthen the digestive organs. Their popularity is increasing with Surgeons and army officers.

A. D. P. * * * * *.

FROM HON. J. A. McDOUGALL, UNITED STATES SENATOR OF CALIFORNIA.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Nov. 3, 1863.

Messrs. W. Chilton & Co.:

You wish to know the medicinal effects of Romaine's Crimean Bitters, as experienced by myself. I very cheerfully comply with your request.

They are excellent for digestion, correcting diarrhœa, nausea, irritation of the stomach, and for the creation of a wholesome appetite. They pleasantly exhilarate, but followed by no stupifying reaction, and are extremely palatable.

In all respects they are the best BITTERS I have ever used.

Respectfully yours,

J. A. McDOUGALL.

The following certificate has been alluded to:

NEW-YORK, Feb. 14, 1863.

From a knowledge of the ingredients and their proportions entering into the composition known as ROMAINE'S CRIMEAN BITTERS, we are enabled to speak of it in terms of high commendation. CALISAYA, or Peruvian Bark, being one of its principal constituents, together with Herbs, Roots and Extracts, having decided medicinal properties, we have no hesitation in recommending it to physicians, and the public generally, as an invigorating Tonic, intended to stimulate the digestive organs.

From its alterative properties, it is calculated to prevent, by its daily use in moderate quantities, CONSTIPATION, FEVER AND AGUE, mild forms of NEURALGIA and RHEUMATISM. It is an antidote to the effects produced by the change of water and diet, correcting DIARRHŒA, curing DYSPEPSIA, COLIC, SICK and NERVOUS HEADACHE NAUSEA, SEA SICKNESS. It is expressly adapted to females of delicate constitutions, and the infirmities of age.

The preparation is composed exclusively of vegetable materials, containing no metallic or mineral substances whatever. Its taste is aromatic, warming and acceptable to palate and stomach.

JAMES R. CHILTON, M. D.

JULIUS G. POHLE, M. D.

We refer to certificates of cures of HEADACHE, &c., and CONSTIPATION of fifteen years' duration, on printed circular around each bottle; also, for general directions for use of the Bitters.

Put up in quart bottles, securely packed in cases of one dozen each. All orders promptly executed.

CIRCULATION

TEST OF MERIT

IN A

PUBLIC JOURNAL,

The SUNDAY MERCURY has a larger circulation than any other newspaper published in the United States, and about three and a half times greater than that of all the other "Sunday Papers" of New-York combined. It finds its way everywhere, because it is everywhere on account of necessity, and makes known in the money of every class of society the business of all who advertise in its columns. No merchandise whatever, which is address the largest body of consumers that can be reached through the Press, it is an invaluable medium, because, for about the same sum which it would cost them to RIDE their announcements in a journal of one-fifth or one-tenth of its circulation, they can REACH THE MILLION both in town and country. Whoever glances at Saturday's SUNDAY MERCURY may learn the secret of its unprecedented popularity. The whole newspaper world is challenged to show such evidences of enterprise and industry as are exhibited in its news department. Mercantile men throughout the Union MUST HAVE its financial news, market reports, curious shipping news and auction sales. They cannot find them so full, so late, so authentic in any other sheet issued on Sunday.

Let it be borne in mind that in EVERY DEPARTMENT OF PUBLIC INTELLIGENCE, local and telegraphic, its reports (many of them from special sources inaccessible to any other press) are up to

DAYLIGHT

ON SUNDAY MORNING.

Can any body wonder, under these circumstances, at the SUNDAY MERCURY'S IMMENSE AND EVER-INCREASING CIRCULATION?

NO DISAPPOINTMENT THIS TIME.

"SUCH IS LIFE,"

BY

PIERCE EGAN,

Author of "Imogen, or the Marble Heart," "The Scarlet Flower," "The Poor Girl," "Lady Maude, or the Wonder of Kingswood Chase."

WILL BE CONTINUED

IN THE

SUNDAY MERCURY OF TO-MORROW, and for the convenience of numbers who applied for copies of last week's paper after

THE EDITION WAS EXHAUSTED,

a carefully prepared and elaborate digest of the opening chapters

WILL APPEAR IN TO-MORROW'S ISSUE.

The success of the New Romance, (which is published from Advance Sheets, furnished EXCLUSIVELY to the SUNDAY MERCURY,) so far, exceeds that of any serial story ever published in an American Newspaper. Original serial romances by the best authors are, however, only one of the features of the GREAT SUNDAY NEWSPAPER. It is a

SOCIAL AND BUSINESS NECESSITY,

the GREAT ARMY PAPER, MERCANTILE PAPER, and LITERARY PAPER of the Union, with Telegraphic Reports from Washington and every other point of interest, to within

THREE HOURS OF BREAKFAST-TIME

on Sunday morning, and Local News to 3 A. M.,

A CIRCULATION

three times greater than the combined issues of all the other Sunday Newspapers is the significant evidence of its popularity.

PATIENCE UNTIL TO-MORROW.

THE FUROR

for

PIERCE EGAN'S GRAND ROMANCE,

"SUCH IS LIFE,"

is unparalleled. This matchless story will be continued in the

SUNDAY MERCURY

and as the edition of the 6th inst., containing chapters 1 and 2 IS EXHAUSTED, a FULL SYNOPSIS of them will precede the opening installment of the romance, to appear in to-morrow's issue. The proprietors of the SUNDAY MERCURY regret that there should have been any disappointments; but the demand for the paper was so overwhelming on Sunday and Monday last, that it was impossible to reserve copies for after-comers. The abstract of the omitted chapters is, however, so perfect and so clear, that nothing will be lost to the reader. Nothing essential to the full comprehension of the story has been overlooked. All may commence with the beginning.

The SUNDAY MERCURY contains the NEWS OF THE WORLD, by mail and telegraph, up to the on Sunday morning. Its local reports are to 3 o'clock A. M.; and its ship, market and financial news, auction sales, &c., &c., the fullest and the latest published on Sunday. Its advertising department comprehends the entire circle of business, wholesale and retail, and ITS CIRCULATION MORE THAN TRIPLES the COMBINED ISSUES of all the other Sunday newspapers.

TO THE READING WORLD.

TO-MORROW,

AT BREAKFAST,

you can read in the SUNDAY MERCURY all the news that will reach the City by mail and telegraph, and all local news that can be gathered by a large corps of able reporters up to the HOUR OF 4 O'CLOCK A. M.

No other journal supplies this desideratum.

THE SUNDAY MERCURY

OF

TO-MORROW

will also contain another long installment of the NEW STORY by PIERCE EGAN, author of "Imogen, or the Marble Heart," "The Scarlet Flower," "The Poor Girl," "Lady Maude," &c., &c., entitled

"SUCH IS LIFE."

To remedy the disappointments occasioned by the early exhaustion of last Sunday's edition, a full resumé of the opening chapters of this GRAND ROMANCE OF THE PASSIONS—the greatest work of its famous author—will appear in the SUNDAY MERCURY of to-morrow, the 13th inst.

THE DISBANDED VOLUNTEER

will have something to say, (in his dry way,) about the PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE, and the "TABLE TALK" department runs positively not be looked at by persons who consider it a sin to exercise their risible muscles on Sunday. So it understood, that the SUNDAY MERCURY has a circulation equal to THREE TIMES that of all the other Sunday newspapers combined.

The proprietors don't wish to hurt anybody's feelings by this statement, but FACT IS FACT.

IN

"SUCH IS LIFE.

By PIERCE EGAN, author of "Imogen; or, the Marble Heart," "The Poor Girl," "The Scarlet Flower," "Lady Maude; or, the Wonder of Kingswood Chase."

IN THE

SUNDAY MERCURY,

OF

TO-MORROW.

The opening chapters of this SPLENDID ROMANCE, published in the SUNDAY MERCURY of Dec. 6, have, as was anticipated, created a marked sensation in the reading world. The editions of the week, City and country, although largely increased to meet the expected demand, were exhausted early in the week; but a full synopsis of the portion of the story given on SUNDAY last has been prepared for TO-MORROW'S EDITION, so that those who failed to obtain a SUNDAY MERCURY of the 6th inst. will find the loss completely supplied, so far as PIERCE EGAN'S masterly production is concerned, in the next issue. The abstract embraces every scene and incident in the introductory chapters necessary to render the continuation clear and intelligible.

The author has not given a high-sounding name to this grand effort of his genius; but in deep and soul-stirring interest, it transcends anything of the present day. More of the advance sheets have reached the publishers of the SUNDAY MERCURY, by steamer, since the 6th inst., and the public may rely upon a regular continuation of the story, from week to week, until concluded.

No effort that enterprise, backed by capital and encouraged by success, can make to render the SUNDAY MERCURY

PEERLESS AMONG

THE most outrageous libel that has yet been perpetrated on our Constitution will be found in the infamous comments and assumptions made in the speech of H. W. BARNARD, in Exeter Hall, England, in which the Northern crime of enslaving human beings is assumed to be a constitutional institution, and an article "in the family relation; and that we were under a compact and bound by an oath to guarantee this infamous crime as a State right, and that "our forbearance" in laboring to hold the oppressed "is the moment of principle" that "an evidence of our Christianity."

Americans, can we! shall we!! allow this atrocious libel on our cherished Charter of Liberty to pass unrebuked. "Honesty is the best Policy," if Honesty is directed by Policy, is the standard assumed in HENRY WARD BEECHER'S speech in England.

Honesty is the only policy, and honesty, even if seemingly against policy, quickens conscience, morality and Christianity.

The best policy is the most popular, especially as it appeals to our pride and selfishness. But the latter is the only life-world sustaining the only just and virtuous rule of action.
